Only Isolated Planes Get to Capital, Reds Declare; Germans Stall on Center Front

(Details on Pages 4 and 5.)
By the Associated Press

German bombers attacked Moscow for the second night in succession last night but the Russian communique declared stubborn defenses prevented the main body of the 150 attacking planes from reaching the Red capital.

"Only isolated planes broke through to the city," said the communique. It reported that several fires which broke out in dwellings were extinguished by fire brigades.

Earlier a German broadcast heard in London reported that many aircraft were over Moscow "dropping bombs and causing more fires and destruction."

Hospital Damaged

Moscow reported scores killed and wounded and several homes and a hospital damaged severely. For the second successive night a Russian communique said only a relatively few of the attacking planes actually broke through the city's defenses—night fighter patrols and heavy anti-aircraft batteries.

The Russians declared at least 15 raiders downed.

A reactivated German-Finnish drive on the Karelian isthmus, apparently designed to cut the Murmansk-Leningrad Railway, was acknowledged by the Soviet command early today, while along the eastern front generally it was claimed the invaders had made no substantial advance.

The Germans, it appeared, were stepping up their northern drive in conjunction with the oldest and apparently substantially stalemate thrust at Leningrad from the south in the vicinity of Pochkov.

Heavy and Inconclusive

Moscow's early morning communique reported fighting was heavy and inconclusive about Porkhov, Smolensk at the center and Zhitomir along the Ukrainian front and spoke also of violent action in the "direction" of Petrozavodsk.

That town, 230 miles north of Leningrad, is a major point on the railroad running southward from Murmansk, the Soviet Arctic port, along the coast of the White Sea and then skirting Lake Ladoga to terminate at Leningrad.

While yesterday's war bulletins had suggested that the Germans were having the better of it on the southern Russian front, although making no great progress at the center and northern center below Leningrad, competent and independent accounts indicated that the first Nazi mass air raid on Moscow had been more spectacular than successful.

Kremlin Untouched

The substance of the report of an Associated Press staff reporter in Moscow was that while it was a furious assault it was comparatively harmless. In the center of the city, he added, the only sign of damage was a large bomb crater in Mokovaya Street in front of the United States Embassy, the Kremlin and other public centers were not touched.

While many structures were hit, he said, apparently all were private dwellings.

At the end of the raid, he added, the city came quickly to life.

Afield, this was the situation during yesterday:

The German high command itself again claimed that the Soviet defense front was being "torn into a number of disconnected groups," and less official Berlin sources went further to assert that at the Soviet center Red troops were retreating east of Smolensk, which is just 230 miles short of Moscow, under heavy fire.

Sweeping Shakeup Looms

Brown to Retire October 15; Kelly Slated as Police Chief

By John Singerhoff
Post Staff Writer

Maj. Ernest W. Brown will retire as superintendent of Metropolitan Police, probably October 15.

His retirement is to become effective after he completes 60 days of accumulated leave which will begin August 15. He intends at that time to attend the annual meeting of the International Association of Chiefs of Police and retire also as that group's president.

Inspector Edward J. Kelly, gray-haired veteran, is slated for Brown's post.

Other reported details of a complete shakeup of the police high command, a "must" after the recent Congressional probe of police, are tentative but well-founded. They include:

Capt. Harvey G. Callahan promoted to inspector and made assistant superintendent in charge of personnel.

Capt. Ira E. Keck promoted to rank of full captain and placed in charge of the Detective Bureau. He will not be an inspector as all his predecessors have been.

Abolition of the Accident Prevention Unit and the transfer of Inspector Arthur E. Miller from traffic work to the post of "inspector in charge of police equipment and property."

Either Capt. Milton D. Smith or Capt. Richard E. Mansfield will be placed in charge of the Traffic Division.

Inspector James F. Beckett, if he does not retire, will return to his former position—"inspector in charge of a district."

Four "super" detectives are to be appointed to hold key positions in the Detective Bureau. They will receive $3,600 annually. Though the men have not been named it is believed they will include Capts. John H. Fowler, Floyd Truscott and Lieut. Robert J. Barrett.

Beckett recently has been filling the vacancy left by the retirement of Inspector Lewis I. H. Edwards, personnel director, and he was scheduled for the job.

Keck, according to reports, already has received Civil Service Commission approval for promotion to captain. The Commissioners were reluctant to raise him to the rank of inspector, and then assistant superintendent so rapidly, it was learned.

Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, former chief of detectives, whose request for retirement was demanded by Maj. Brown, was promoted in 1934 from the rank of lieutenant to captain, to detective chief with the rank of inspector, overnight.

Brown Favors Outsider

Keck's promotion to assistant superintendent in charge of detectives would have to be accomplished in the same manner, though the method was condemned by the House subcommittee.

Keck, who is now acting chief of detectives, is actually only a lieutenant on Civil Service Commission rolls, despite the fact that he carries the rank and pay of a captain as long as he is assistant to the chief of detectives.

Inspector Kelly, a good friend of Commissioner John Russell Young, who probably will succeed Commissioner Hazen as police commissioner, has long been mentioned as Maj. Brown's successor.

Brown, however, has indicated that if he is asked to name a man to take his place, he will recommend an outsider. He has spoken of a Michigan State police captain with whom he became acquainted in the Police Chiefs Association.

Persistent rumors in city government circles to the effect that there is a movement afoot to block Inspector Kelly if he tries for the position, have been scoffed at by the inspector. He repeatedly has asserted that he will welcome an investigation of his 30 years as a policeman.

Maj. Brown said last night that "any announcement of my retirement will come from the District Building." He has stated during the past few weeks, however, he will not "remain in Washington another winter."

4,000 Charged in 6 Months

He was appointed chief of police in October, 1932, and has held the post longer than any other man in District history. He has been a policeman "in every rank" for more than 40 years.

It was through his desire to make a "progressive Police Department" that he sent Inspector Miller to the Northwestern University Traffic Institute, a move which resulted in the formation of the Accident Prevention Unit.

Loud opposition from both traffic and civic organizations is expected to follow any attempt on the part of the Commissioners to abolish the Accident Prevention Unit, the School Boy Patrol coordinators, or the Metropolitan Police Boys' Clubs or transfer Inspector Miller.

Commissioner Young reluctantly approved the formation of the Accident Squad last October, saying he thought 40 men "too many to work only on traffic." He has indicated since then that the organization is still on probation.

Records and statistics prove conclusively that accident investigation has resulted in more convictions for traffic violations, increased enforcement.

Aluminum for Action

Capital to Swap Old Pots And Pans Today for Planes

The crash of aluminum into a fleet of trucks crawling along District streets today will echo in towns and cities throughout the country and play harsh music for the enemies of democracy.

Out of the great American catchalls—cellars, attics and pantries—is pouring a stream of kitchenware, machine parts, toys and scores of other kinds of articles designed to be melted down and molded into the instruments of defense.

Washington housewives will contribute more in today's collection than was at first expected, reported nearly 4,000 women who completed two days of solicitation last night. The local housewives are going over the top with the trend throughout the Nation—20 million pounds the goal and nearly 40 million pounds now the expectation.

Officials of the local drive said last night that "not one worker has quit" because of unwelcome reactions from housewives. The number of solicitors increased yesterday over Monday.

Many housewives already have their donations packed in boxes and waiting to be taken away by the trucks today. The officials added that donations were offered in many sections of the city where collections were expected to be scarce.

Collections which began Monday in many areas surrounding Washington also were reported to be en-

Capitol Move Gains to Hold Draftees Over

Best Way Believed For Congress to Rule Limited Emergency For That Aim Only

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Sentiment for a Congressional declaration of a "limited national emergency" to hold selectees, Reservists and National Guardsmen in service indefinitely gained on Capitol Hill yesterday as anti-Administration forces met to map their opposition campaign.

Chairman May of the House Military Affairs Committee introduced a resolution declaring that a national emergency exists "to the extent and for the purpose only" of holding the troops in uniform. The committee will begin hearings on the measure this morning, with Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, as the first witness.

A similar resolution, sponsored by Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, is before the Senate Military Committee. Several members of the group indicated privately that they favor this method of handling the matter over the various other measures and compromise substitutes suggested.

"War Council" of Opponents

Half a hundred Senate and House members, at a meeting last night mapped a fight against the move to extend the service period. Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, declared agreement was reached also to oppose removing restrictions against sending selectees and Guardsmen outside this hemisphere, and against joint action between the United States and Britain in Ireland.

An informal bipartisan committee of four Senators and four Representatives issued the call for the "war council." The group consists of Senators Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana; Bulow (Democrat), of South Dakota; Taft and La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, and Representative O'Connor (Democrat), of Montana; Hill (Democrat), of Washington; Vory (Republican), of Ohio, and Mundt (Republican), of South Dakota.

Senator Thomas and other backers of the limited emergency declaration hope to draw the teeth of some of the opposition by the terms of the measure. By invoking the so-called "extension clauses" of existing law fixing the service of citizen soldiers at 12 months, they hope to answer the argument that the Government is violating a contract with the men.

Taft Offers Compromise

At the same time, they feel the proposal will have the support of many Congressmen who would oppose an outright declaration of a national emergency. Such a statement by Congress, not specifically limited to the retention of the troops, would invoke a long list of wartime statutes and, in the opinion of many, virtually declare war.

Still another proposed substitute was advanced yesterday by Senator Taft. He appeared before the Senate Military Affairs Committee to offer a compromise under which selectees would be held 18 months and be released at the rate of 75,000

Last Flare Brings Rescue

4 Nurses on Torpedoed Ship Tell of Harrowing Days Adrift

By the United Press

Norfolk, Va., July 22.—Four American nurses tonight described as "a harrowing experience" the 12 days they spent adrift on the North Atlantic after two torpedoed blew their ship out of the sea on a foggy June morning.

They attracted a United States destroyer with their last signal flare, they disclosed, after a convoy earlier had passed them by.

The nurses were part of a group headed for London to help in war relief work.

They are Marion Blissett, of Detroit; Victoria M. Pele, of Auburn, N. Y.; Rachel St. Pierre, of Boston, and Lillian M. Pesnick, of Albany, N. Y.

Packed with drama from the time their captain warned them they were in submarine-infested waters until they finally hailed their rescue vessel, the statement signed by the four nurses told of confusion in getting away from the sinking ship, of refusing important information from the submarine commander who "spoke perfect English," and of days of subsisting on hard tack and rain water.

The group, whose rescue had been announced earlier, was taken to Ice-

U. S. Weighs Steps to Counter Japan's Expected Drive South; Welles Visions Postwar League

Acting Secretary Makes Prediction As Norse Legation Wing Is Dedicated

Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State, yesterday looked beyond the crushing of Hitlerite Germany and envisioned a new "association of nations" that would police the world and guarantee security.

He praised Woodrow Wilson and said, in effect, that the League of Nations was never given a chance to operate as the War President had intended it to operate.

Welles said that only through an association of nations, or some adequate international instrumentality, could two things be achieved in the disastrously shaken world that will exist after the war. He said these were:

First, abolition of offensive armaments, as well as the tools which make such armaments possible.

Second, equal economic opportunity to nations throughout the world, with none holding a monopoly over natural resources.

"Realize the Great Ideal"

"I cannot believe," Welles said, "that peoples of good will will not once more strive to realize the great ideal of an association of nations through which the freedom, the happiness and the security of all peoples may be achieved."

Welles' pronouncement, delivered at the dedication of a new wing to the Norwegian Legation, was the most concrete, most far-reaching outline of America's postwar aims that has yet been delivered by a member of the Roosevelt Administration.

It was regarded by some as an attempt to drive a wedge between Adolf Hitler and the German people, to encourage eventual revolt in Nazi-conquered lands, and to add spark to the "V for Victory" crusade now sweeping those countries.

Welles chose as the place for his speech the roof of the new wing to the Norwegian Legation, where Crown Princess Martha hoisted the flag of Norway and looked to the day when her homeland would once again be free.

"Obsession . . . of One Man"

The tall Undersecretary of State, who is at the helm of the State Department in the absence of Secretary Cordell Hull, described the ceremony as "an act of faith in the ultimate victory of the forces of human liberty."

"I feel," he said, "that there are joined with us in spirit here today, as silent witnesses, the peoples of all of the other countries which have been mercilessly overrun during these past two years."

"I know that they believe as we do that out of this holocaust into which the nations of the earth have been plunged by the criminal obsession of world conquest of one man."

425 Millions Loaned by U. S. To England

Will Be Used to Pay For Pre-Lend-Lease Purchases of Arms

The United States loaned Great Britain 425 millions yesterday, the first Government loan to Britain since the World War.

The money will be used to pay for war supplies that the British ordered here before the passage of the lend-lease law. The loan will save the British from the need of selling their American securities holdings at sacrifice prices to pay for their pre-lend-lease buying.

Federal Loan Administrator Jesse Jones, who announced the huge credit to Britain, also disclosed he has offered to buy any strategic materials which Russia might want to sell to the United States in order to help the Russians pay for their war purchases here.

"The Russians," Jones said, "have a good supply of cash—gold. They haven't asked for a loan."

June, 1941, Law Invoked

Manganese and chromium would be the leading items taken from Russia, if transportation difficulties can be surmounted, he said.

Smaller credits, of ten million dollars for Chile and an additional 6 million dollars to Colombia, will be signed today, he said. The Chilean loan will be used for purchases in the United States, while Colombia will use its new funds to pay for public works.

The loan to Britain is secured by approximately 500 million dollars of collateral, made of American corporation securities and capital stock of 41 British-owned United States insurance companies. The loan was made under authority of the War Relocation Authority.

Banner Will Fly Again Over Her Native Land, Martha Declares

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

Crown Princess Martha, tall, royal exile from Norway, stood before a little flag staff on the new wing of the Norwegian Legation yesterday. She was wearing the end of her brief "victory" talk, delivered in tones that were serene and yet defiant.

"And so," she said, "I raise here for the first time the unsullied and unyielding flag of Norway. I thank my people at home and abroad for their faith and courage and pray that Norwegians everywhere will always keep Norway's name as clean and as honored as it is today."

"May this flag soon fly again over my beloved land—over a Norway that is once more free and happy and a good neighbor to the whole world."

Staff Is Increased

Her Royal Highness thereupon grasped the halyards and hoisted the flag of Norway, the blue crossed with white border on a red background which Norway's ships have carried around the world. A moment later the band struck up the Norwegian national anthem, and the princess joined in, her contralto voice clearly audible.

Ostensibly this was just a little flag-raising ceremony along Washington's embassy row, but the cosmopolitan gathering that saw it—the diplomats, statesmen, social lights and others—will never forget it.

Some of the women were seen to dab at their eyes as they looked at the princess, very regal in her azure gown, tilted hat and sapphire and diamond earrings, standing under her flag and singing the anthem of her homeland.

The wing was added to the Norwegian Legation at Thirty-fourth Street and Massachusetts Avenue

OPM Meets Today on Boosting Defense Load of Auto Plants

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

Management and labor union representatives of the auto industry will meet with OPM officials today to arrange for directing defense orders into factories whose production of passenger cars may ultimately be cut by as much as 75 per cent of present levels.

It was learned yesterday that OPM officials are agreed on the necessity for the 50 per cent production curtailment proposed Saturday by Price Administrator Leon Henderson, and declared that they, the industry and its labor were willing to accept the even deeper slashes of civilian output that are now believed to be necessary.

However, it was understood that the OPM is opposed to the suddenness of Henderson's projected cuts, and is insisting that the curtailment be gradual, and be met, step by step, with compensatory defense orders. Otherwise, it was argued, widespread unemployment of men and machines will result, with a scattering of the supervisory and production force and consequent difficulty of conversion to defense work.

The issue, informed sources intimated, has been, or soon will be, taken to the White House, to determine whether the Office of Price Administration, in case the Russo-

President Cautious

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

The United States last night gravely awaited a new move by Japan's war machine, presumably toward French Indo-China, and considered a program of diplomatic and economic actions to counteract it.

Officials here did not know how quickly or where the storm would break—whether the drive would be south into Indo-China or north against Siberia—but at the White House and the State Department there was conviction that the Nipponese Empire was ready to expand again.

London reports said that the United States and Britain were familiar with and approved steps each contemplated taking in case the military drive materializes. The New York Times said possible American moves included stopping of purchases of Japanese gold, through which Japan has obtained close to 450 millions of dollar credits in three years, freezing of Japanese assets in this country, and complete embargo of essential exports to Japan.

Likely to Hit the Move

Japanese demands for concessions in Indo-China were believed in some circles to be the cause of negotiations which Vichy said yesterday were going on between France and Japan. At the same time, the Japanese press charged that Chinese, British and Free French forces were preparing to invade Indo-China, recalling similar charges by Hitler which he issued as an excuse for invading Holland and Belgium.

Boosting the belief that the Tokyo government was ready to invade the territory that could provide a jumping-off place for an attack on Britain's Singapore base and could give them control of the Gulf of Siam, these developments:

1. President Roosevelt informed a press conference yesterday that the Japanese government had imposed a censorship over radio and cable communications. Laconically, he added that he thought it was significant.

2. Playing his cards close to the vest, the President declined to say whether he expected a new aggressive move by Japan in the near future. He referred the question to the State Department where, of course, it would not be answered without the President's permission.

3. The Panama Canal remained closed to Japanese vessels due to "urgent repairs" to it, after about ten Japanese ships decided to give up waiting for permission to transit the canal and set sail for home via Cape Horn.

4. Official observers of the Far Eastern scene made known in private conversations that they have decided that the recent cabinet shift in Japan was designed to give the Tokyo government a free hand to fall upon Siberia, in disregard of the Russo-Japanese friendship pact, in case the Russo-

Japanese Expected To Strike South

A flood of reports from all around the globe hinted last night that action of major importance was about to take place in the Far East. Most reports hinted at a Japanese drive southward into French Indo-China.

Naval Plane Deliveries 20% Under Estimate

By the Associated Press

Rear Admiral John H. Towers, chief of naval aeronautics, told a House committee yesterday that actual deliveries of naval airplanes for the first six months of 1941 fell 20 per cent short of estimates.

The admiral said granting of higher priorities to land planes than to naval aircraft was causing "grave concern."

Testifying before the Naval Committee, Towers asserted that originally he had estimated that 1,995 planes would be received in the six months but only 1,547 were delivered.

He explained that original schedules contemplated that if early deliveries were made, it was hoped that late deliveries would mount up as plans got under way and that the year's total delivery would approximate the total deliveries scheduled.

"I no longer entertain such hopes," he added.

"On top of the original program," the admiral said, "a program of production of some 6,000 four-engine land plane bombers was superimposed in May."

"Such a program, with the high priority which it has been accorded, cannot fail to have an adverse effect upon other defense production."

"Machine tools for the heavy bomber program have been awarded higher priority than for any Navy aircraft."

"The impending effect of the high priority of the heavy bomber program on production of other aircraft for the Navy is of grave concern to the Navy Department."

"With world conditions as they are today, it is logical to expect that the Navy will be called upon to meet the initial impact of any hostilities in the Atlantic, the Pacific, or both oceans concurrently. It is only proper that the fleet, including its components, should be adequately and effectively equipped for such eventualities."

Meanwhile, the Senate Defense Investigating Committee heard Edward R. Stettinius, another key figure in the defense setup, call for a clearer definition of the relationship between the priorities division of the Office of Production Management and the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply, which is headed by Leon Henderson.

Stettinius, chief of the priorities division, said that until the relationship was clarified the problem of small businesses unable to get raw material because of priorities could not be solved satisfactorily.

U.S. Expects Japan To Strike Again

Asian armies are overwhelmed by Germany.

Japan clamped down a strict censorship over both radio and cable communication. President Roosevelt, in telling of the move at his press conference in Washington, declined to say whether he expected any new aggressive move by Japan in the near future, but when asked whether he thought Tokyo's action significant he replied in the affirmative.

Japan and France were reported negotiating over French Indo-China, and British sources heard that the negotiations concerned Japanese demands.

Allies Accused of Plot

The Japanese press, which often reflects official opinion, charged that the Chinese, British and Free French forces were prepared to invade French Indo-China, and the German radio said that in the event of such an invasion "measures would be taken immediately."

Neutral military observers in Shanghai said they were skeptical of the origin of the Japanese report, which was dated Hong Kong. Declaring they doubted that the British censor at Hong Kong would pass such a story, they suggested that there might be a similarity between the report and German accusations of British intentions before the invasions of Scandinavia and the lowlands.

In Vichy, authorized sources declared negotiations on Indo-China were under way between France and Japan. This developed at the pro-German newspaper Les Nouveaux Temps was saying France was in critical danger of losing Indo-China unless it worked with Japan for its protection.

A Japanese army spokesman in Shanghai acknowledged that Japanese reservists living in China had been called for duty, but he said the move was merely for training.

Disturbing, Says London

A British broadcast heard in New York said reports of large-scale mobilization throughout Japan and requisitioning of horses and motor trucks indicated "big developments are imminent."

In London an authorized British source said reports that Japan was making demands on Indo-China were disturbing, noting that assurances given Britain last month that Japan had no territorial demands on Indo-China were rendered by Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka, who since has been removed from the government.

British sources in Singapore, expressing surprise over Japanese reports that the British were preparing to invade Indo-China, said the reports "possibly are being circulated to pave the way for Japanese action."

formal censorship over outgoing communications for several years, President Roosevelt indicated that at the conference with George and Connally it had been decided not to attempt to amend the Neutrality Act this year. The Chief Executive said that they discussed several technical aspects of some laws, including the Neutrality Act, and decided to do nothing about it.

The New York Herald-Tribune said it was reported that one of the technical questions concerning the neutrality law related to the possibility of augmenting aid to Britain by releasing American flag ships from the prohibition against entering combat zones.

In connection with the suggestion that the United States might stop buying Japanese gold, it was noted that Secretary of Treasury Morgenthau, who administers the gold-buying program, was a late afternoon caller at the White House.

The way was paved for complete embargoing of exports to Japan when this country, almost two years ago, announced it was abrogating the commercial treaty with the Tokyo government.

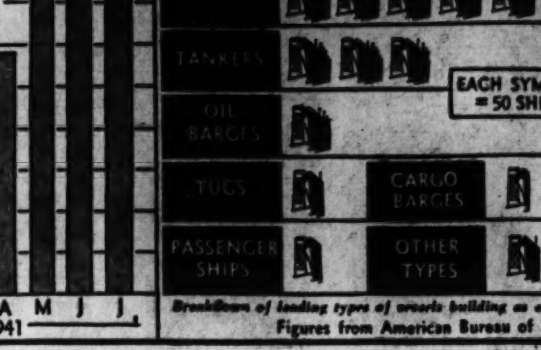

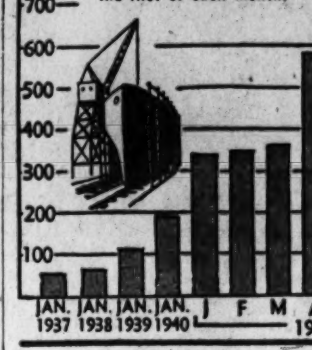

Cutting off petroleum shipments to Japan and ending purchases of Japanese silk are two possible weapons available to this country.

The question of "leaks" of information about secret Government moves was raised at the press conference. The questioner had in mind disclosure of the occupation of Iceland by Senator Wheeler (Democrat) of Montana, a few days before it was formally announced.

The President would say only that the problem is worth thinking about in the light of the fact that com-

50 Legislators Oppose Decree Of Emergency

By Arthur Hachten

International News Service Staff Writer

Fifty Congressional opponents of President Roosevelt's foreign policy agreed at a meeting last night to oppose with all their might his request that Congress declare a national emergency exists.

Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, speaking for the group after the meeting in the Senate Office Building, said:

"We agreed to oppose in every way Congressional declaration of a national emergency, at least on any information we have received up to date."

The group, he said, was unanimously opposed to retention of selectees, National Guardsmen and Reserve officers in the Army for an indefinite period, with a majority "definitely against any extension."

"We were all agreed against removing prohibitions in law against sending draftees and guardsmen outside of the Western Hemisphere," Taft said, continuing:

"We will insist that there be no joint action between Great Britain and the United States in Iceland. We expect the President's statement that the United States will occupy Iceland alone will be carried out."

"We were also unanimously agreed that notwithstanding Soviet Russia is at war with Germany, there must be no let up in the fight against Communism in the United States."

The meeting which included Republicans and Democrats, developed very strong sentiment against extension of the 12-month limit of training for draftees. Senator Wheeler was authorized to appoint a committee of five Senators and ten Representatives to study the many proposals affecting service of draftees, Guardsmen and Reserve officers, and to report back recommendations at another meeting to be held soon.

"Of course, we are all in favor of maintaining an adequate Army for our own defense."

Hospital to Test Mentality of Boy In Triple Slaying

Washington, Va., July 22 (AP)—Thomas Dewey Cameron, Jr., 15-year-old Blue Ridge country boy charged with killing three persons at Huntly, Va., last May, was sent today to the Southwestern State Hospital at Marion for mental observation.

In ordering that step, Circuit Judge J. R. H. Alexander yesterday continued generally the case of the lad who is charged with slaying Edward Johnson, 42-year-old storekeeper; his wife, and their daughter, Ethel Johnson, 15.

The trial had been tentatively fixed for July 24 following Cameron's indictment last week, but Commonwealth's Attorney W. F. Moffett said no new date was fixed in the court order. James Settle, county clerk, noted that the September term of court here would be a vacation term and that the next regular term would open the second Monday in November.

Move for Holding Draftees Gains

His plan would provide an Army of 1,948,000 officers and men, at least 1,272,000 of whom would have at least nine months training. The Regular Army would be expanded to 793,000, and the National Guard be sent home in increments beginning next summer, under the scheme.

The Senate committee heard a succession of opposition witnesses protest that the retention of the troops would be a "breach of faith" to the men and "another step toward dictatorship and war."

"Implied Promise" Frank Olmstead, national chairman of the War Resisters League, declared the Army's proposal is "not sincere" and "really a step toward a new A. E. F." The Rev. A. J. Muste, representing the Fellowship of Reconciliation, said the bill would violate an "implied promise" to release the troops. He urged that if "decent pay" was offered, enough volunteers could be secured.

Mrs. Elsie Effenberg, of Jersey City, representing the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, said that organization opposed the legislation because they felt it would weaken democracy.

Joseph Leib, who said he was a founder of the Young Democratic Clubs of America, told the committee it might "force this measure down the throats of the Nation's young men" but that it couldn't "build an army whose heart and soul will accompany their guns."

Gregory Mason, a Riverside, Conn., writer, said that Canada drafted men for only four months and for only home defense, and asked: "Are we going to be 'Uncle Sam' again and do more for the British than they are willing to do for themselves?"

Gen. Palmer Testifies

Brig. Gen. John McAuley Palmer, U. S. A., retired, testifying in favor of the legislation, told the committee that the German general staff has "aimed at world conquest" since the World War. Its opportunity came, he said, because the English-speaking peoples were "roped in pacifism, appeasement, and narrow isolation."

Declaring that the United States is in greater peril than ever before, Palmer said that Hitler must "conquer or encircle" this Nation to achieve his aim.

The Senate committee expects to wind up hearing tomorrow or Friday. Either the Thomas resolution or some other measure extending the service of the troops will probably be voted out for consideration on the floor next week. A proviso of the Thomas-May resolution, permitting citizen-soldiers to volunteer for service outside the Western Hemisphere may be eliminated while an amendment lifting the limit on the number of selectees has considerable support.

Hague-Edison Dispute Divides Jersey Democrats

Trenton, N. J., July 22 (AP)—Democratic leadership in New Jersey split open today, seven weeks before the primary election, as Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City, for years the State leader, and Charles Edison, newly risen to power as Governor, engaged in a verbal slugfest.

The issue which brought the Democratic national vice chairman, Hague, and the former Navy Secretary, Edison, into wide-open conflict was passage by the Legislature after a 19-hour battle of four bills to compromise $2 million dollars in delinquent railroad taxes and penalties. Hague opposed the bills; Edison supported them.

ceeding expectations. Some 233 trucks serviced by 3,100 Boy Scouts, American Legionnaires, policemen, firemen and other District employees will cover the city today. Collections start at 8 a. m. and close promptly at 8 p. m.

Officials of the drive emphasized last night that persons who expect to contribute but will not be at home today should leave their contributions on front porches, at curbs or in hallways. Police have been detailed to patrol the streets to prevent stealing.

Officials also emphasized that material should be given to no one but uniformed workers. Collection teams of two captains, 8 Boy Scouts and two laborers will each be given a specific area to cover. The truckloads will be emptied at centrally located storage bins at the police precinct station houses and in front of the District Building.

Any contribution of aluminum not collected today can be taken directly to police headquarters or will be picked up by special request later in the week by phoning National 6000. It was announced. District Commissioners Young and Kules symbolized today's collection by tossing pieces of scrap aluminum into the central bin in front of the District Building yesterday.

Joseph D. (Radio Joe) Kaufman said last night he intends to contribute all the aluminumware in his home at 2939 Devonshire Place Northwest to the drive today and replace it with "utensils that don't contain material essential to national defense."

Kaufman, who for many years sponsored a tinfol collection for the benefit of the Washington Home for incurables on his radio program, said he hoped all the persons who had helped in that campaign would aid in the present one.

Into the beginning of the collection went 200 pounds of aluminum from camera parts which were bought up after the last war. Private firms also have donated many of the trucks serving in today's roundup. The True-Blue Brewing Co. announced that its plant will be closed for the day while its fleet of 37 trucks aid in the collection.

Officials of the Office of Production Management under whose auspices the drive was launched, emphasized last night that Army off-cials and manufacturers have stated that scrap aluminum—such as is being obtained in the drive—is just as good as the virgin metal for defense production purposes.

All the scrap aluminum will be sold to accredited mills and the funds from the sale turned over to the Treasury Department, it was said.

Key Points Claimed In Moscow Drive

Berlin, July 22.—German shock troops charging forward with flame-throwers and hand grenades were reported tonight to have taken key Russian defense positions at Polotsk in the drive toward Moscow, itself battered by the first mass German air raid.

The break-through on the northern wing of the central front was declared to have come after a two-day battle in which tens of thousands of Russians were killed or wounded. German accounts said it permitted an infantry advance on a broad front.

The battle was reported by the official German news agency D. N. B. as Germans heard details of the Luftwaffe assault on the Soviet capital, where many fires were said to have been set and important buildings destroyed.

Soldier-Reporter Lorenz Bersch wrote in the D. N. B. account that specialists in smashing bunkers had to be called in the battle near Polotsk after Germans had been forced to retreat in their first assault on that section of the Stalin line behind the Dvina River.

The area is about 340 miles from Moscow and is north of the Smolensk sector, where the heaviest fighting had been reported previously.

Two Days of Forced March

"Never before in the eastern campaign did the Russians defend themselves so determinedly," Bersch said, "but never before did the fighting cost them so much blood. Their losses ran into tens of thousands."

German infantry divisions were said to have come into position Sunday night after two days of forced marching. Early Monday, Bersch said, 30 German artillery batteries opened a withering two-hour fire to soften Russian positions. At 5 a. m. German storm troops sprang to the attack. Engineers took isolated fortifications. They were said to have worked slowly forward, cutting through hundreds of yards of barbed wire entanglements.

"Then a miraculous fire broke out of an intensity we did not expect," the account said. "Shells from heavy machine guns and small caliber cannon came from all sides through cross-crossed fields which the Russians had cut obliquely from the bunkers through the underbrush."

"Our engineers in the barbed-wire entanglements were unable to advance. Salvos from the Russian bunker cannon were devilishly well aimed. The foremost company of reinforcing infantry hurried forward."

Commanders Fall

"The first battalion sought to turn the flank to the left, but the neighboring bunker opened fire. There was no way of breaking through. One company commander and two platoon commanders had fallen already."

After hard fighting the Germans had pushed deep into Russian defenses, but the main fortifications were still in Russian hands, Bersch explained.

Even the German battle headquarters was under Russian machine-gun fire while the Germans discussed the situation. Dive bombers were useless because they could not find the excellently camouflaged fortifications in the heavy forest.

During the night flame throwers were sent forward and burned away the forest in order to give guns a clear field.

"At the same time, bunker specialists, masters in the use of explosives and flame, stood ready," Bersch wrote.

"At 5 a. m. (Tuesday) the battle broke out anew. Where an impenetrable forest stood yesterday, there now were only blackened tree stumps—a landscape of ashes. Far behind, in the smoke, were the reinforced concrete positions of the enemy."

"Antiaircraft guns (apparently machine guns) began a direct onslaught. Farther back, heavy guns of the German artillery shelled until noon."

"Again the shock troops advanced, working forward under the protection of artillery fire. Then, at a moment's notice, the German batteries ceased fire. Only a few bunkers were still intact. These, however, defended themselves to the last man. They had to be put out of action by flame throwers and hand grenade charges before the infantry was able to advance on a broad front through the breach."

Bersch said that prisoners who were examined later reported that picked Russian troops had practiced fighting in these positions for years.

Russian Panzer Corps Wiped Out

Another D. N. B. dispatch said a Soviet commissar's report declaring that the third Russian panzer corps on the northwest front had been wiped out was found in a Russian plane which made an emergency landing.

The report was said to have dealt in detail with losses the Russians suffered July 10.

"The third panzer corps, which lost all its armored cars, doesn't exist any more," D. N. B. quoted from the report. "Out of the entire third panzer corps only one tank escaped from the enemy's encirclement."

The high command announced that the dusk to dawn raid on Moscow was made by "strong combat units in rolling attacks," and informed sources said it compared to the biggest raids on England.

Twenty spreading fires were seen east of the Kremlin, it was said, and the entire region of the Moscow River bend, site of Communist party administrative offices and power plants, was described as aflame.

The German reports said the Soviet defenses were ineffective, although plenty of shelling and searchlight activity was in evidence.

(The Soviet government said 200 planes participated in a 5½-hour attack which should be considered a failure. No military objectives were hit, it was said, and 17 German craft were shot down.)

Explosive bombs of all calibers and thousands of incendiaries fell on vital objectives, a spokesman said.

The high command said the attack was in retaliation for Russian raids on "the open capitals of our allies, Bucharest and Helsinki," and, significantly, that "buildings of high Soviet executive and administrative importance" were "destroyed or badly damaged."

Preliminary bombings of other capitals, the high command has always contended, were confined to purely military objectives. The open admission that public edifices were among the first bomb targets in Moscow was in keeping with the expressed German determination to "destroy bolshevism to its roots."

German war correspondents who flew with the Moscow raiders reported seeing great flames in the Russian capital.

"Bolling Sea of Fire"

Anton Mueller-Engstfeld said that the burning of the city generally could be compared only with the conflagrations lighted in Birmingham and Sheffield, English cities raided many times, and another journalist, Egon Kieffer, said he was 95 miles from Moscow when he first saw the blazing city.

Kieffer said that there was "a boiling sea of fire" in the heart of Moscow after German bombers "shook the foundations" of the city.

Mueller-Engstfeld, stating that his group of bombers had as their target buildings of the Soviet army, the Comintern and the G. P. U. (Soviet secret police), said huge fires were started in the region of these objectives. He said that the Kremlin was surrounded by "a forest of searchlights."

This writer said Smolensk, strategic rail center on the road to Moscow which the German high command reported taking July 16, was still burning last night. He added that "burning villages mark the trail of the Bolshevik retreat."

On the land front the high command stated that "break-through operations of the German armed forces and their allies have torn the Soviet defense front into a number of disconnected groups," and added that "despite stout local resistance and stubbornly conducted counter-attacks uniform leadership of the enemy no longer is apparent."

London Observers See War Nearing Crises on All Fronts

By the Associated Press

London, July 22.—All signs pointed tonight to a great intensification of the war now raging from the North Sea to the Black Sea.

Illustrating the belief here that the summer's campaigns are reaching crises were the rising violence of R. A. F. raids on German territory, reports of hurried Nazi efforts to improve their Channel defenses and the expressed view of authoritative quarters in London that the German forces driving on Leningrad and Moscow have been halted by a Russian defense of continuing stubbornness.

Some informed neutral sources predicted that if the German thrusts remained slowed down for another 72 hours the Red armies themselves would take the initiative in an effort to punch through the central German front at Smolensk.

Nazis Bolster Defenses

The Germans, said these observers, have no continuous lines on that salient and the Soviet counter-offensive, if it comes, would be calculated to strike at the base of the triangular Smolensk salient and endanger not only the Nazi rear there but the basic communications and supply system for all German armies on the Eastern Front.

As to the Western Front, it was learned that British observation of Germany's cross-Channel fortifications had revealed that considerable work is going on, indicating, it was said, fear of a large scale British raid on the French coast.

Meanwhile, observers say an element of considerable danger for the Soviet was in the Kiev area in the Ukraine.

Some informants said a German thrust southward along the west bank of the Dnieper River was developing and that if it should be successful it might cut off the Russians in Bessarabia.

German occupation of that region, it was said, might change the tempo of the war. Once the Ukraine was taken, it was added, the Germans might well be able to keep the remainder of the Soviet armies engaged with a smaller Nazi force than at present and turn their attention westward to England.

During the day Britain's "V" victory—campaign stirred new enthusiasm, for the R. A. F. reported sighting huge V's laid out in lights on the flat Belgian countryside.

Some champions of the "V" campaign, however, began to suspect it was petering out.

Hannen Swaffer, writing in the Daily Herald, said "V also stands for vacillation."

"Abroad the 'V' sign may have effects on public morale," he said.

British Blast Shipbuilding Yard Near Seine Mouth, Bag 4 Nazis

By the Associated Press

London, July 22.—British bombers sweeping almost unhindered over northern France today attacked shipbuilding yards near the mouth of the Seine River and their escorting Polish fighters shot down four Nazi planes.

British fighter pilots said two large flights of Messerschmitts encountered over France veered away and refused to give battle.

The Polish pilots machine-gunned German airbases, hangars, and grounded planes, attacked a ship off the coast, and claimed a direct hit on one coastal antiaircraft battery in addition to destroying four German fighters.

Bombs were seen to strike on the Seine shipbuilding sheds and shipways and the targets were left hidden in smoke, the air ministry said. Other targets were attacked between Calais and Boulogne.

Three British fighter planes were missing from the daylight operation.

tion, and one plane failed to return from heavy overnight attacks on objectives in western Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium and a military camp in Denmark.

British Coast Raided

London (Wednesday), July 23 (AP).—German bombers rocketed over the east coast of England early today, dropping bombs through a curtain of antiaircraft fire. Other German raiders bombed a northeast coastal town. There were no immediate reports of damage.

New Moscow Raid Leaves Scores Dead

Moscow (Wednesday), July 22.—Scores of persons were killed and wounded and several houses, a hospital and a school were heavily damaged when a strong force of German bombers attacked the Soviet capital last night for the second night in succession. It was reported today.

Executions Fail To Deter Serb Guerilla War

Ankara, Turkey, July 22.—Guerilla warfare by Serbian irregular Chetniks continues in Serbia, Bosnia and parts of Macedonia, despite countless executions, imprisonments and German warnings that 100 Serbs will be killed for every German or Croat shot by the Chetniks, according to information reaching foreign military circles here this evening.

The latest incident, according to the reports, concerned a band of more than 200 Serbian soldiers led by Chetnik officers which descended upon Belanovica, Serbia, 50 kilometers northwest of Kragujevac, seized more than a ton of foodstuffs and ammunition from warehouses and escaped into the Bosnian Mountains without a single casualty. This attack was staged during the past week, it is reported, and was executed in the space of a few hours during which the Serbian soldiers annihilated the guard posted about the food warehouse, killed several German sentries nearby and escaped with their raiding force intact.

More than 80,000 Serbs have been executed by German and Croat firing squads and hangmen, according to the information from Serbia. These reports are substantiated in some cases by photographs illustrating the bodies of men and women hanged.

Eye-witness reports from Serbia reaching Turkey, from the photographs and from diplomatic sources indicate that while the majority of executions have been carried out by shooting out of hand, between 15,000 and 20,000 have been hanged. In most cases the victims were hanged by short ropes thrown over tree trunks looped about the necks of the Serbians, after which the Germans force their prisoners to mount a small pile of bricks—then kick the bricks away. The Serbs died by strangling, sometimes after an hour or more.

More than 200 Serbs, including an orthodox priest, were hanged in this manner in Vrsatz, it is reported. Another Serbian orthodox priest and 15 followers were reported hanged at Panchewo. Resistance nevertheless continues. It is reported, and there is fighting all night long in Belgrade, Banja Luka in Bosnia, in Montenegro—especially in the vicinity of Berane and in southern Serbian villages and communities, the reports stated. The British "V for Victory" campaign, it is expected, will find a great following in Serbia. One of the reports tonight said that box-cars pulling into Bulgarian stations from Nish, Yugoslavia, were almost covered by huge chalked figures of the letter "V."

Veterans of Byrd Antarctic Trip Hold Reunion

Amid far more comfortable circumstances than attended their last meeting, a half dozen Antarctic adventurers had a reunion in National Zoological Park yesterday.

All veterans of the United States Antarctic Expedition led by Rear Adm. Richard E. Byrd, the party consisted of Dr. Paul Siple, Dr. F. Alton Wade, Murray Weiner, Roy Fitzsimmons, Jack Perkins and the host, Malcolm Davis.

The latter, who is keeper of the zoo birdhouse, went into the South Pacific with the expedition in 1939-40 to collect specimens. The others, all scientists, were in Washington yesterday to present technical reports, drafted since their return, to the United States Antarctic Service.

After lunch, the party went on a sight-seeing tour of the various animal houses. Yes, they headed first for the penguins.

Army Rest Camp To Be Established In Anacostia Park

An Army rest camp for use of Negro soldiers will be established in Anacostia Park in the near future by the National Park Service and the Civilian Conservation Corps, at the request of the War Department. Park Service officials announced yesterday.

Date of the beginning of the development, which will provide rest facilities for between 500 and 1,000 soldiers, has not yet been determined, it was said.

Development plans call for water and sanitary systems, portable tent platforms, recreation halls and possible swimming facilities.

The proposed Anacostia camp is one of 16 new rest camps authorized by the War Department, bringing the total to 32 in 19 States and the District.

School Job Goes To Ross Company

The Ross Engineering Co. yesterday was revealed to be low bidder on the new Stephen Elliott Kramer Junior High School, between Seventeenth, Eighteenth, P and G Streets Southeast, when estimates were opened at the District Building.

The school is scheduled to be completed within a year after contracts are awarded. It will be a three-story brick structure, 200 feet square with 50 classrooms, an auditorium, gymnasium and recreation rooms.

The school was named for Stephen E. Kramer, former assistant superintendent of schools.

Briton Says Bismarck Crew Turned Coward

By Carey Longmire

Copyright by New York Tribune Inc.

London, July 22.—German naval gunners manning the eight 15-inch guns, and other armament of the Nazi 35,000-ton battleship Bismarck, turned cowards under heavy British naval shelling and refused to man the Bismarck's guns, thus leading to the sinking May 27 of the pride of Adolf Hitler's navy, an anonymous columnist in the Evening Standard said today.

Most of the turrets of the Bismarck, which some British naval men have assessed at nearer 50,000 tons displacement than her officially announced 35,000, were apparently put out of action early on the morning of May 27, when the Nazi warship was sunk, according to the accounts at the time.

"For British Target Practice"

The Evening Standard's account said: "Bismarck's story is not wholly glorious. Some of her crew refused to fight. The gunners came out of their turrets and said: 'We're not going back in there for British target practice.'"

"They had to be forced to their guns... After Bismarck had scored her quick success over the battle cruiser Hood in the Denmark Strait, messages arrived from the Fuehrer congratulating her crew on their glorious victory."

"Soon afterwards, as the battleship was making her way past the tip of Greenland, a fleet air arm aircraft fired a torpedo into her... That night the fleet air arm got the Bismarck again with a second torpedo. This broke the steering gear. As a result, the ship was offered to any man who could repair it. None was able to do the job."

"Next day the battle was joined with the British battleships Rodney and King George V and their escorting cruisers. The Bismarck fought stoutly for a time, but then her fire ceased, apart from one turret. Aboard the British ships, it was supposed that the gunnery control system had been smashed. In fact, Bismarck's discipline had been smashed."

New Nazi Checks In Latin America Possible—Roosevelt

President Roosevelt declared yesterday that maybe there might be new steps by the United States to check any German infiltration into Latin America.

When pressed for amplification, he replied that "maybe" covered the situation.

Mr. Roosevelt was asked at a press conference whether he thought the blacklisting of 1,800 firms and individuals in Latin America by the United States prevented further danger of German infiltration in Latin America.

The President said he would not go so far as to say that and then answered with the word, maybe.

Soviet Fight Slows Rate Of Nazi Gains

Copyright by New York Times

Bern, Switzerland, July 22.—Eliminating verbiage from the communiqués issued by both sides, neutral observers point out that Russian resistance seems as stubborn as ever and that in any case it compels the German high command to prepare a succession of maneuvers in order to overcome it.

As a consequence the rate of progress of the assault has been reduced 50 per cent in four weeks.

Armored spearheads may advance impetuously and cover many miles; what counts is the consequent advance of main bodies, and it is estimated at present at not more than 12 miles a day on an average. At the outset it was more than double this.

The Russian resistance is such, indeed, that stress is laid here on the fact that the Germans grant the defenders "a measure of tactical skill," although asserting at the same time that they are in a desperate situation and have no reserves left.

Certainly the present phase of the war has no precedent in military history. The battle of the frontiers followed the lines of the campaigns in Poland, in Flanders, and in France, but there is no parallel for the battle of three cities—Leningrad, Moscow and Kiev—fought on a front of nearly 2,000 miles.

The allegation is made that Russian resistance is inspired by terrorism and that the Red soldiers fight on for fear of being shot individually by OGUP (secret police) agents or being mowed down by machine guns behind them. It may be so, but military circles point out that it would need many thousands of men to stem the retreat of a routed army.

Nazi Bombs Left Few Scars On Moscow, Reporter Finds

By Henry Shapiro

United Press Staff Writer

Moscow, July 22.—This black-out capital bore relatively few scars of its first bombing of the war when I toured the central streets early today. Immediately after the "all clear" of a 5 1/2-hour German aerial assault.

At least 200 Nazi planes, sweeping in from the west with a rain of brilliant flares to light their targets, attempted the mass raid, but only a few were said to have succeeded in penetrating Moscow's defenses and the attack was described officially as "a failure."

The German bombs started several fires in the central district, burned out some dwellings, caused a few casualties and left a gaping bomb crater in front of the United States Embassy.

Today Moscow was going about its business as usual and appeared to be scarcely touched by bomb damage.

Calm in Subways

Public services were functioning normally and newspapers devoted only two short paragraphs on inside pages to the attack, reflecting the official view that it was of slight importance.

The 4,000,000 people of Moscow, well schooled in precautions by five previous air-raid alarms, took last night's attempted mass attack calmly as they huddled in underground subway stations.

Women with children in their arms slept on the hard concrete stairs of the stations.

Young boys and girls flirted with each other, with a watchful eye on parents who had fallen asleep. Everyone was calm and a middle-aged worker turned to me in the subway station in the palace of the Soviets and said:

"Don't worry. Our air force will take care of the Nazis."

Only a few hours before the official Soviet spokesman, Solomon A. Lozovsky, vice commissar of for-

Plane Industry Needs 800,000, Hillman Says

Employment in the defense aircraft industry must be increased five times over present levels, rising to one million workers by next July, OPM Codirector Sidney Hillman revealed yesterday.

His estimate represented a sharp and sudden increase over figures he quoted earlier this month, when he declared that the present production force of two hundred thousand workers would have to be augmented by only about 324,000 new employees by next April.

Hillman also said that present employment in shipbuilding, figured at 375,000 men, would have to be expanded to 550,000 workers in the next 12 months.

The estimates were made in connection with a meeting called yesterday in Chicago with OPM executives and railroad management and union officials to consider the possibility of transferring 100,000 skilled railroad maintenance workers to defense industries.

Emphasizing that it was not at all certain whether such a transfer was possible, and admitting the increased labor requirements necessitated by an expanded freight car building program, Hillman said the conferences were to make sure that all the present railroad workers were used to best advantage.

Hillman pointed out that railroads have on their employment rolls more than 400,000 maintenance workers who are skilled craftsmen. About 80,000 of these, he estimated, are not regularly employed and might be transferred, particularly to the aircraft and shipbuilding industries.

Profits Tax Plan Rejected

By Robert C. Albright

The House Ways and Means Committee yesterday rejected the administration's proposed plan of excess profits taxation by a vote of 20 to 5, then groomed its $2,500,000,000 tax measure for House action next week.

Members agreed to ask the House Rules Committee for a tight closed rule, barring all but committee amendments on the floor. The rule, if adopted, will force virtually an "up or down" House vote on the bill intact, as the committee reports it.

Reading through the defense revenue measure for eleventh-hour changes, the committee carried the bill to the brink of final ratification.

The House will be asked to vote the closed rule Monday. Three days of general House debate will follow and passage of the bill, without material change, was predicted for Friday.

Last-minute committee amendments to the bill yesterday substantially reduced steep excess profits taxes, made the five-year individual 10 per cent defense tax "permanent" and allowed as invested capital credit against excess-profits taxes an added 25 per cent for "new capital" as a stimulus to investment.

Refusal of the committee to reconsider its "optional" method of computing excess-profits taxes followed a direct request from the president to committee leaders that the Treasury's invested-capital plan be substituted.

The President's proposal was outlined to the committee at a special meeting last week, but no action was taken. That time Administration spokesmen of the invested capital plan found it impossible to materially alter the 20-to-4 vote originally cast against the Treasury plan, which gained only one vote on yesterday's move for reconsideration.

The Treasury substitute would have eliminated the committee's "average earnings" method and based the profits levies mainly on invested capital. Firms with high earnings records could have earned a 10 per cent maximum before the taxes were applied, with smaller percentage allowances for lower-earning concerns.

Instead the committee sealed its own plan in the bill, giving taxpayers a choice. Corporations could either claim an unallowable credit of 9 per cent of their currently invested capital on the first five million dollars and 7 per cent on the excess, or as an option, claim 85 per cent of their average earnings during the base period, 1939-40.

Modification of the committee's steep excess profits taxes came on motion of Representative Buck (Democrat), of California, who failed Monday in an effort to set aside the committee's decision to require husbands and wives to file joint income tax returns.

New Wine Rates

The new wine rates impose an excess of 8 cents a gallon on wine up to 14 per cent in alcoholic content, 24 cents a gallon up to 21 per cent alcoholic content, and 50 cents a gallon in excess of 21 per cent.

Original committee rates were 15, 35 and 65 cents a gallon, respectively.

Rates on sparkling wines, liqueurs and cordials were modified from 7 cents a half pint to 4 cents a half pint, and on artificially carbonated wines, from 3 1/2 cents to 2 1/2 cents a half pint.

The committee's excesses on distilled spirits were allowed to stand, but a time allowance of 9 months, instead of 7, was permitted for payment of the floor stock tax, with no exemptions.

A warning that statements falsely attributing increases in price to taxation are punishable by law was issued by Representative Cooper (Democrat), of Tennessee. Cooper said the committee's report will emphasize penalties for such statements of $1,000 or one year imprisonment.

Among tentative provisions of the bill receiving final committee ratification yesterday were:

Increased individual income surtaxes, starting at 5 per cent on the first dollar of taxable income.

Corporation surtax rates ranging from 5 per cent on incomes up to $25,000 to 6 per cent on any excess.

A step-up of 10 per cent in each excess profits tax bracket.

Excess and gift taxes increased to raise additional 113 million dollars.

1932 excise taxes made permanent.

Tax on playing cards increased from 11 to 12 cents per card.

Exemption of domestic corporations engaged in mining strategic materials from excess profits taxes eliminated.

On the evening of the fifth of July we thought we were nearing Greenland when at 9 p. m. our look-out reported seeing a ship. At first we thought it was just a smudge. Then in the distance we saw several ships. Later on we saw several ships that proved to be U. S. Navy vessels.

"We signalled several times and we used our last flare when the U. S. destroyer hove to and came alongside."

All the victims were taken immediately to the Norfolk Naval Hospital at Portsmouth for treatment. Dr. Albert McCown, assistant medical director of the National Red Cross, flew down from Washington, and will be joined by Miss Mary Beard, head of the nursing service of the National Red Cross at Washington.

Washington Selective Service Boards yesterday temporarily suspended work on new order number master lists to supervise physical examinations of 500 prospective inductees. These were conducted at six hospitals last night.

By the Associated Press
New York, July 22.—The Daily News said tonight that four showgirls were to inherit the entire estate of William Guggenheim, copper millionaire who turned to song writing at 71, under the terms of his will soon to be filed in probate court.

The will of the former philanthropist, who died June 27, left nothing to Mrs. Guggenheim or to his son, William, the News reported.

The widow's attorney, Abraham L. Blumenthal, said that under New York law Mrs. Guggenheim could claim one-third of the estate, regardless of the will. He said he did not know what action Mrs. Guggenheim would take.

The News said the girls, identified as Mildred Borst, Mary Alice Rice, and Florence Sullivan, all of New York City, and Lillian Andrus of Hollywood, were to "share and share alike" in the estate, valued at more than $1,000,000.

By terms of the will the executors could sell Guggenheim's mansion at 3 Riverside Drive or anything else in the estate. The executors were named as Simon Guggenheim, a brother, and Harold A. Content, attorney.

The provision concerning the widow, Mrs. Almee Steinberger Guggenheim, whom he married in 1904, and the son, included the statement that "I have made ample provision for them during my lifetime."

A member of the wealthy family whose fortunes began in copper-mining developed by the late Meyer Guggenheim, William Guggenheim retired from active interest in mining in 1901. He gave much of his time to philanthropy and was a prolific writer of letters-to-the-editor.

His songs included "You're a Glamour Girl," written in 1940.

Five Are Indicted In Atlantic Coast Dope Ring Probe

Baltimore, July 22 (AP).—Four men and a woman arrested last June 26 in simultaneous narcotic raids in Baltimore, New York and Washington were indicted by a Federal grand jury today on narcotic and conspiracy charges.

Police said at the time of the arrests the raids were conducted in an effort to break up an extensive ring of dope peddlers along the Atlantic seaboard. Quantities of narcotics were seized.

One indictment accused Julius Eisenberg, of Washington, of selling about 250 grains of illegally imported heroin hydrochloride on specific dates between May 18 and June 26.

George Presto, Louis Presto and Margaret P. Lovejoy, all arrested in New York, were accused of conspiring to sell the drug. In other counts, George Presto was accused of selling about 161 grains of the heroin since last March 14 and Louis Presto and Margaret Lovejoy of aiding and abetting him in the sales.

George Presto also was indicted on charges of selling about 462 grains of the drug between last April 5 and June 26 and Louis Presto of aiding and abetting him in the sales.

A fourth indictment charged Kenneth V. Woolridge with selling the drug in Baltimore.

4 Magnesite Firms, One in Germany, Are Fined by U. S.

New York, July 22 (AP).—Fines totaling $79,500 were assessed in Federal Court today against four corporations, including one concern in Germany, and seven individuals, who pleaded nolo contendere to an indictment charging violations of the antitrust laws in the production and sale of magnesite and magnesite bricks.

Dead burned magnesite and magnesite bricks are used for furnaces in steel and copper mills.

Federal Judge Louis W. Strum, of Florida, temporarily sitting here, imposed the following fines:

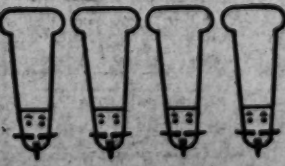

Harbison-Walker Refractories Company, Pittsburgh, $15,000; the General Refractories Company, Philadelphia, $15,000; the American-Austrian Magnesite Corporation, Pittsburgh, $12,500; Austrian Magnesite Company, Ltd., of Germany, a wholly-owned subsidiary of American-Austrian Magnesite, $12,500.

Individuals involved and their fines were: P. B. Moorman, vice president, $5,000; W. B. Coullie, general sales manager, $3,500, and P. R. Hilleman, secretary, $1,500, all of Harbison-Walker; F. L. Greene, president, $5,000; E. P. Heuser, vice president, $3,500; L. Y. Greene, vice president, $1,500, and N. G. Myrellius, secretary and treasurer, $1,500, all of General Refractories.

IT TAKES FOUR MEN TO MAKE A SALAD

Says an old Spanish proverb: "A spendthrift for oil, a miser for vinegar, a counsellor for salt, and a madman to stir them all up."

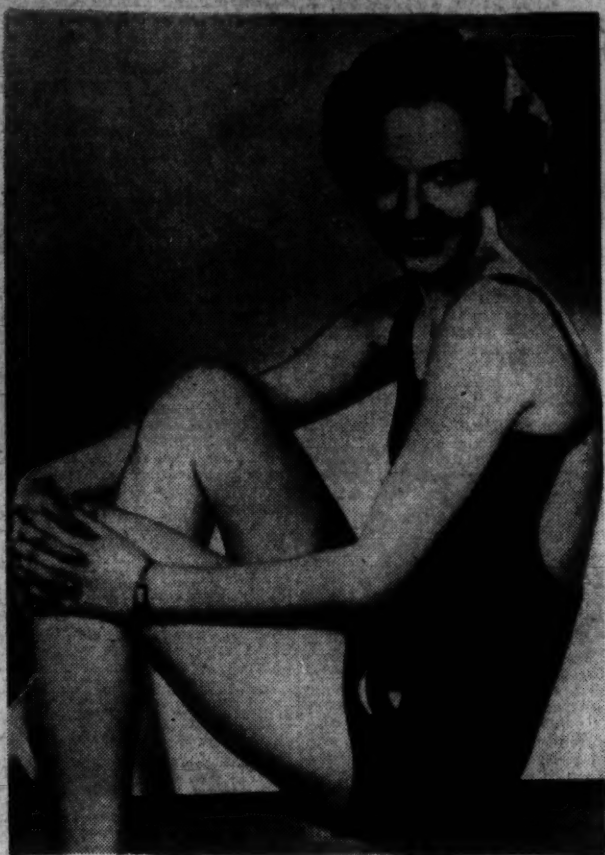

Nowadays it takes only one man to make a superb salad dressing, provided he knows about Lea & Perrins Sauce, the original Worcestershire.

Mixed with mayonnaise or French dressing, it bestows flavor as raptures as if a whole platoon of chefs had collaborated.

Auto Overtakes In Crash; Virginia Driver Is Unhurt

A fire rescue squad and two police scout cars raced over South Capitol Street at 7:30 o'clock last night in response to a call announcing "car in collision has overturned and caught fire—occupants entrapped."

At L Street the rescuers came upon the accident; it did not measure up to the alarm. A car owned and driven by C. H. Bowers of Rural Route 3, Alexandria, Va., had overturned. Considerable gasoline from the tank was spilled across the street, but there was no fire. Bowers, sole occupant of his car, was neither entrapped, nor hurt, according to police. Also unhurt was F. P. Vaughan, 3108 North Eighth Street Arlington, Va., driver of the other car involved in the collision.

'There's Magic in Music' Aims to Please All

Allan Jones and Susanna Foster Costarred In Film of Interlochen Music Camp; Youthful Musicians Brighten Little's Feature

By Richard L. Coe

Substituting for Nelson B. Bell

"THERE'S MAGIC IN MUSIC." Paramount pictureization of a screen play by Frederick Jackson, from a story by Andrew R. Stone and Robert Lively, based on an idea by Ann Ronell, with Allan Jones, Susanna Foster, Margaret Lindsay, Lynne Overman, Grace Bradley, William Collier, Jr., Heimo Haitio, Kaye Connor, William Chapman, Dolly Loehr, Patricia Travers, Richard Bonelli, Richard Hageman, Irma Petina, Tandy MacKenzie, Fay Helm, Esther Dale, and Deems Taylor. Directed by Andrew Stone. Previewed Tuesday morning. At the Little Theater.

PERHAPS THE BEST WAY to illustrate Paramount's desire to please everybody in "There's Magic in Music" lies in the finale of the Allan Jones-Susanna Foster musical opening this morning at the Little.

Squaring off at each other on the stage of the mighty Manhattan Opera, two casts sing "Carmen" and "Faust" at the same time. Together. Simultaneously.

Such generous kowtowing to that indeterminate public which "loves" "good" music naturally has a variety of effects. Those who prefer one opera to the other may listen to the melodies they choose. Those who enjoy musical tricks may marvel at the slick dovetailing of the best-loved French operas. Those who desire their opera in English get that plus an explanation of what's going on, for which, incredible as it seems, there is a soupçon of reason.

The reason lies in the struggle of young student musicians to make good before New York's music moguls. Backing is the reward and need one add that they get it? Their sharply timed "Faust" potpourri and the "Carmen" sung by the Metropolitan's Irma Petina and Richard Bonelli captivate the musicologists through this novel (and time-saving) device.

Sixteen-year-old Susanna Foster is the sparkly voiced youngster about whom "There's Magic in Music" is built. She has one of those flute-like sopranos which dart around in the upper register the way a kitten plays with a ball of yarn. She's blonde, looks older than her years, and has an amusing gift at impersonations.

Setting for Susanna is Michigan's famed Interlochen Music Camp, a summer school-camp where talented musicians in their teens gather each year for study and recreation. Radio has brought the camp's able, progressive work to the ears of America for the past several years. The setting is of inspiring beauty and is admirably adapted to the prime qualities of Miss Foster—simplicity and youth.

From Burlesque to Interlochen

Susanna begins her adventure as a burlesque house singer. On parole from reform school, she's definitely on the spot when the arm of the law reaches in on the strip-teasers. By chance, she's defended by Allan Jones and Lynne Overman, both quick to recognize her vocal gifts. They lure a scholarship to the Interlochen Camp through the former's standing as son of the founder. The little burlesque toughy has her troubles making the grade, but she's got a heart of gold which the films never fail to recognize as such. When the camp is balanced on the cliff of financial ruin, Susanna comes through to win.

Much as "There's Magic in Music" resembles some of the Deanna Durbin-Gloria Jean films, the supporting company of youthful—and able—musicians is refreshingly novel. There is a superb violinist in Heimo Haitio, of Finland, whose patron is the great Jan Sibelius. There is some sparkling piano playing in the Grieg E flat Concerto by 8-year-old Mary Ruth Kizlar, of Texas. And an evidently accomplished violinist—she's played with the New York Philharmonic and the Chicago Symphony—is Patricia Travers, a 13-year-old with a witty dead-pan style that'll floor you. She's stuck in the mountains, where the thought of the seashore sets her grumbling. The orchestra in the film, incidentally, is not that of the Interlochen Camps, but the noted California Junior Symphony.

Allan Jones is not forgotten in this musical menage and his singing is as robust as ever. Margaret Lindsay has the conventional romantic lead opposite him.

As we observed in the first place, there's something in "There's Magic in Music" to please everyone, if not all of the time, some of the time.

New York, July 22.

For the first time in the history of the Army, a band of soldiers will be permitted to tour through a number of camps in an entertainment program. The band is the one stationed at Fort Dix—a 14-piece swing band headed by Sergt. Herbie Fields, who once played the saxophone in the Raymond Scott Quintette.

Next week Block and Sully will inaugurate a radio series, in which they will portray the Damon Runyon characters, "Ethel and Joe Turp." Al Jolson, who just flew back from California, where he signed the replacement talent for his musical, stopped in North Carolina on the way home. "I heard a guy singing the Hut-Sut song in North Carolina," Jolson vows, "and when he was through, he discovered that he had sold 50,000 bales of tobacco."

At the Stork Club a few nights ago, Vic Meyers, the orchestra leader who has become the Lieutenant Governor of the State of Washington, danced by Sonny Kendis' bandstand and watched him play the piano. "You're working awfully hard," Meyers criticized. "Why do you work so hard, Sonny?" "Because," replied the bandleader, "I'm studying to be Governor."

Michael Pavloff, the stage manager at Ben Marden's Riviera, managed the Club Casanova in Paris before the outbreak of war. This was the place which attracted the glittering international set and the holders of every prominent title in Europe. When Ben Marden told Pavloff of his desire to have eminent people seated in the Riviera each night, the stage manager told of the memorable evening when he succeeded in getting four monarchs to occupy the ring-side at the Club Casanova. King Gustav of Sweden, Carol of Rumania, George of Greece and Alfonso of Spain, all sat at adjoining tables. "You must have had solid business that night," Marden commented, enviously. "Oh, no—on the contrary," Pavloff informed, "there were so many detectives and personal bodyguards surrounding the club that the regular customers—afraid that something terrible must have happened—didn't show up at all."

Robert Shackleton, who played the juvenile lead in "Very Warm for May," went into the Army a few months ago. He told his friends that he didn't mind serving his hitch in the Army—but what he feared most was that Broadway would forget all about him in the meantime and that he'd have difficulty in getting new roles. But Broadway, and all America, will remember Robert Shackleton. His photo appeared on every front page in the country Thursday—for he was the one selected to draw the first number in the new draft lottery.

Clare Boothe, who recently returned from China, discussed the Far East question with a group of people who immediately began questioning her about the effect of the bombings in Chungking. Japanese morale, etc. . . . Cas Canfield, the book publisher, propounded a series of questions, and Miss Boothe asked him: "Have you been to China?" "Frankly," Canfield confided, "the only knowledge I have about China comes from the one time I saw the new picture, 'Ku Kan'."

Only One New Picture Appears On Roster of Week's Films

"DANCE HALL." Carole Landis and Cesar Romero costar in the incoming week's single new picture, a comedy-drama opening tomorrow morning at the Capitol Theater. Romero plays the owner of the hall where Miss Landis works as a taxi dancer. William Henry has the role of an ambitious composer and the supporting cast includes June Story and J. Edward Bromberg. Dixie Dunbar and Cass Daley costar in the Capitol stage revue, with the musical-comedy star featuring her group of male dancers and the singing comedienne appearing in vaudeville before her tour next season with Al Jolson in "Hold On to Your Hat."

"CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT." Bob Hope and Dorothy Lamour return to F Street after a two-week run at the Palace in this comedy of a film star who enlisted in the Army rather than take the chance of being drafted. Lynne Overman and Eddie Bracken are featured. Opens tomorrow morning.

"CHINA FIGHTS BACK." This "March of Time" release, describing the hopes and chances of China in its struggle against the island kingdom, is the central short subject of the incoming week at the newhouse. Other features include a comedy with John Barrymore and Rudy Vallee and "The Riveters," a Disney cartoon. Opens Friday morning.

"THE BRIDE CAME C. O. D." Betty Davis and James Cagney will continue for a second week in their slapstick comedy concerning an heiress and her aviator-abductor. Stuart Erwin, Jack Carson and Eugene Palette top the supporting cast. Lani McIntire and his orchestra, with the Aloha Islanders and Walkiki Maids, also continue for a second week in their Hawaiian revue. Buster West and Lucille Page are others on the variety bill.

"THE PICNIC GROVES" at the amusement park report record-breaking reservations for family and organization reunions, while the average Sunday attendance for the nearby swimming pools consistently passes the 2,500 mark. Paul Kain's orchestra plays in the Spanish Garden ballroom for week-night dancing.

"THE RELUCTANT DRAGON." Walt Disney's novel studio tour, a full-length feature in Technicolor with Robert Benchley in the leading "human" role, continues at the Fifteenth Street house. "Baby Weems," latest of the Disney whims, is among the short subjects which form the unique film. There's also an "Information, Please," with Jan Struther.

"THEY MET IN BOMBAY." Clark Gable and Rosalind Russell continue for a second week in this tale of two jewel thieves who get mixed up with British heroism and the China-Japanese War. Peter Lorre and Jessie Ralph top the supporting figures.

"KISS THE BOYS GOODBYE." The musical adaptation of Clare Boothe's comedy with Don Ameche, Mary Martin and "Rochester" in the starring roles reopens at the Metropolitan after a week at the Palace.

'Born Without Ears'

Hollywood, Calif., July 22. Bette Davis says whatever else people think about actresses, she's sure they believe they're born without ears. "If I took all the things seriously I hear about myself in crowds and on dance floors," says Bette, "I'd crawl in a hole and pull it in after me. So the best thing to do is to build a wall around yourself, then do as you please."

"When Ginger Rogers got the Academy award last year," she recalled, "I, knowing how she'd been kicked around in this town, wanted to go over and hug her. But I hadn't gone halfway before I was facing a battery of cameras. And I heard a woman say, 'Here's Davis, coming after more publicity.' But I went on anyway, and I'm darned glad I did."

With Zorina and a flock of beauties all over the "Louisiana Purchase" set, the rough, tough group men ignored the girls and were gawping around a bird cage in which two little Australian felines were pitching some bill and doo.

Ty Power's doing a revival of "Lillian" in Connecticut, because he's longing to do it on the screen. Well, if "Lillian" is ever again made into a picture, why not get that magnificent actor, Joseph Schildkraut, who first met her in this country, and made your heart go pit-pat all over again in "The Parson of Panamint."

A group of coeds in Denver wrote protesting against killing Errol Flynn off in "They Died With Their Boots On," in which Errol plays Gen. Custer. Director Raoul Walsh says he's sticking to history, and when the picture washes up there'll be no skits, no puns and no Errols.

Bewildered that his dinner party for pianist Artur Schnabel was misconstrued in certain quarters as an occasion for announcing his engagement to Letitia Fairbanks, Huntington Hartford is throwing another shindig denying it. Sure, we know who some of these party, yams, and they can be held at the foot of jealousy, the root of all ills. . . . Preston Sturges says story about his next picture being written by someone else is all honey. He'll do the honors as usual.

Brian Donlevy hopes to do "King of the Khyber Rifles." It was bought by Twentieth for Victor McLaglen just as his contract expired. It's particularly timely just now when Germany's attempted invasion of Russia threatens that entry way into British India.

Jack Dixon, Boston newspaper guy turned actor, advice and regrown that beard. It may be a ticklish business, but he's better looking with it. . . . Marie Rosenbloom topped an argument two kids were having about an ostrich. "An ostrich," said Marie, "is a bird with wings that don't work. But it doesn't matter on account of an ostrich can't fly anyway!"

Alan Hale has something new in bars. Because his swimming pool is filled with his own kids and those from the neighborhood, he's built beside the pool a special bar for the kids who serve soft soda, orange juice and soft drinks. Grownups take their refreshment inside.

Benjo, a nuke, had an entire company work to a frazzle when he went into a bank which bottlenecked an entire column of soldiers. Just as they were about to build a fire under him, an extra boy walked over to Benjo and preferred an ice cream cone—and it worked like magic!

Barbara Brewster's boy friend, Blake Garner, tells about the producer who woke up one night in a cold sweat. He'd dreamed there was a vacancy in the studio and he had no more relatives left. . . . Harry Sugarman told one about the producer who came into this country without a dime and now owes $40,000.

Bimbo Barnes manages to get herself mixed up in the funniest situations in one picture a jealous wife tore most of her clothes off. In another she had to do a striptease. Now, in "Three Girls About Town" she gets mixed up in a murder mystery and ends up in a coffin. "I'm playing a plume ghost!" says La Barnes, brightly!

Izetta Jewel, Jr., Returns To Cross Roads in Coward Hit

By Richard L. Coe

Strike off a silver cowbell, off happy silvermouth Izetta Jewel, Jr., returned last night to the Cross Roads stage for a week of Noel Coward's "Private Lives," still a vision of light after the rigors of a Manhattan winter.

Also in the Virginia hayloft was an overflow covey of night owls, packing the rafters to welcome the blonde beauty to her third season at Cross Roads. As bewitching as ever to watch and certainly even more mistress of her evasive art than in the past, Miss Jewel proved as smooth a Coward heroine as is likely to wander south of the Mason and Dixon line these summer nights. She chips off her lines with disarming facility, is charmingly abandoned in the celebrated rolling-on-the-floor scene at the close of Act II without being coy about it and altogether avoids the curse of being just another actress putting on a translucent veneer of sophistication. In other words, Izetta is the McCoy and from the looks of Cross Roads last night, you'll be lucky to get look-see space this week.

Of course, the Coward comedy of manners is pretty sharp amusement in itself. Its gleaming artifice has faded somewhat, to be sure, in the last eventful 11 years, but it's still amusing sophistry, this consciously amoral tale of a couple who decide they still love each other when they meet five years after divorce while on separate honeymoons.

Reginald Allen plays the faithful-through-divorce husband, getting his laughs, but, for the reviewer, at least, anticipating them with too much obvious satisfaction. The frozen-face approach is still best for the Coward profundities. Those two unwanted mates are satisfactorily etched by Buel Patch and Edith Simmons, while Harriett Hulsch is the maid who keeps to herself.

Neil Linger's sets are pleasant, particularly the hotel terrace. Howard Wentworth directed with winning seal and altogether you'll find the Cross Roads at its happy best this week, thanks, especially, to the spirited beauty of the visiting Miss Jewel. As you've very likely guessed, this was a case of love at first sight.

OPM Meets Today on Auto Output

Administration and Civilian Supply plan, or the OPM method, will be adopted.

That the President is apparently sympathetic to the latter plan was indicated yesterday when he declared at a press conference that the real word for the objective was not curtailment, but substitution. There will not be a cutting off of production, Mr. Roosevelt said, but the substitution of some tools and workmen on one article in place of another.

What OPM and OPACS are attempting is not to cut off production one day and months later to substitute armament orders, but to tide the period over on a level basis, the President said. The process will be gradual, he indicated.

No Concrete Plans
Although OPM Director General William S. Knauden has indicated that the two billion dollars of armament orders now held by the industrial which probably would permit the production of only about one-fourth as many nondefense motor vehicles as are now coming off the assembly lines—it appeared yesterday that there are still no concrete plans for giving the industry the defense contracts to compensate for the nondefense cut.

Today's meeting it was indicated, will inaugurate a shop-to-shop analysis of the potentialities of the various branches of the industry to assume further defense work.

Promises that makers of auto parts and components will obtain a "greatly increased volume" of defense work in the "immediate future" was made yesterday by Knauden and OPM Co-Chief Sidney Hillman at a meeting of 130 members of the parts industry.

An OPM statistical expert, it was learned, placed the size of the defense program at 60 billion dollars, having doubled since last March. In view of the increase the meeting was told, additional defense contracts must be placed quickly in plants now manufacturing consumer's durable goods.

San Carlo Opera Opens Here Aug. 13

Fortuno Gallo will bring his famous San Carlo Grand Opera Company to Washington for the first real "season" of summer opera in the Nation's Capital, beginning Wednesday, August 13.

C. C. Cappel, manager of the opera here during its summer season, announced that a number of Washingtonians are adding in backing the venture. He pointed out that summer opera has been established successfully in Chicago, St. Louis and Hollywood.

Norse Dedicate Legation Wing

for practical reasons—the staff has increased from 8 to 40 since Hitler overran Norway—but it has come to take on a profound sentimental value, to become a symbol of Norway's faith in victory and freedom.

It was so viewed yesterday by the speakers—by Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, who used the occasion to make an extremely important pronouncement; by Wilhelm Morgenstjerne, the Minister from Norway; by Sir Arthur Salter, head of the British shipping mission, who represented Lord Halifax, and, of course, by Princess Martha herself.

The guests invited to the dedication formed a most cosmopolitan group. Rubbing elbows were Constantine Oumansky, the Russian Ambassador, and the Vatican's delegate in Washington, the Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, and also statesmen of such divergent views as Senator Claude D. Pepper (Democrat) of Florida, and Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican) of Michigan. Col. William J. (Wild Bill) Donovan, head of the President's new intelligence outfit, was there, and also William S. Knudsen, of OPM, and William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

Entering the legation the guests were confronted by a huge V, formed of evergreens. When they went to the buffet, they were handed napkins with a V in one corner. The "V for Victory" crusade was swept Norway as it has every other country in Europe overrun by Hitler's legions.

The dedication ceremony, started just as the sun was going down, was held on the roof of the new wing. At the outset, Minister Morgenstjerne explained that the little piece of American soil, now Norwegian territory, on which the wing was built, was given to the Norwegian Legation by friends, to be converted into a garden, a playground. At the time, he said, nobody dreamed that it would one day be needed as a workshop.

"But we do," he said. "At the time of the invasion of Norway in April last year there were eight of us in the legation. Today we are 41 strong."

A Wing With Wings
"In itself it is not a very remarkable thing, of course, to build a new wing—some new offices, thousands upon thousands of them, I suppose, are coming into being these days."

"But when in spite of this we ask you to come, it was because we hoped that, perhaps you might feel as we do—that the idea is bigger than the house, that, if I may say so, this is a wing with wings."

"We hoped that the very fact of our expanding, at this time, when Norway temporarily is being occupied and raped by foreign masters, might symbolize to you, to the world, yes, to the aggressors themselves, that we defy them, that we are building for the future, that we have abundant faith in victory and freedom."

He recalled how the Nazis struck at Norway, in the dead of night, without warning of any kind. He recalled how they bombed Norway's cities, broke into her peaceful land, killed her men, women and children.

They Still Fight
But the Norwegians still fight, he said.

"They fight today on the home front, a bitter, heroic fight with weapons of the spirit, of the will, and love of country. They fight in such a way that Nazism in Norway today has suffered one of its greatest ideological defeats."

The Minister recalled a saying, "God gave us memory, I think, to make us remember." He said, he is what sustains the Norwegian people in their days of darkness and trial, the memory of those roses of the life of freedom that Norway once enjoyed.

Crown Princess Martha, who was introduced by the Minister, recalled that she had lived in the United States now almost a year. She echoed what the Minister had said. "Norway is at war. It is fighting with all its strength and all its resources, to regain that freedom and independence which was our precious possession until 15 months ago."

A Going Concern
"The great Norwegian merchant marine of four million tons and its 25,000 sailors are sailing the seas for our common cause, under the Norwegian flag and the management of the free Norwegian Government in London."

"Norwegian soldiers, sailors and pilots are training in Norway and camps in Great Britain and Canada."

The Norwegian government also under present conditions are upholding the unbroken tradition of never defaulting on a loan. Interest is being paid, for instance, on all our dollar loans in the United States.

"Yes, the free Norwegian government is a going concern. It makes its great daily contribution, on land and sea, to the common fight of the democracies against the aggressors."

Here the Crown Princess delivered her peroration, raised the flag, and joined in singing Norway's national anthem.

'Why, the Police Must Have Been Looking ...'

Welles Visions A League of Nations

man and of the satellites who surround him, there can come no peace until the Hitlerite government of Germany has been finally and utterly destroyed."

He said he had no doubt that millions of people—not only in England, China and "enslaved" Norway, but in Germany and Italy as well—were asking what the future held after the struggle was over.

He then envisioned the postwar world that might come after the "crushing defeat of those who are sacrificing mankind to their own lust for power and for loot." After relating how "blind selfishness" in this country and how greedy power in other parts of the world combined to wreck the League of Nations, he said:

"Some adequate instrumentality must unquestionably be found to achieve such adjustments when the nations of the earth again undertake the task of restoring law and order to a disastrously shaken world."

Only through some rigid form of international control and supervision, he said, could real disarmament be achieved.

And no peace could be made which would be valid, he added, unless it established fully and equitably the natural rights of all peoples to equal economic enjoyment. He added:

"So long as any one people or any one government possesses a monopoly over natural resources or raw materials which are needed by all peoples there can be no basis for a world order based on justice and peace."

Objective Before the World

The word security, he said, represents the end upon which the hearts of men and women everywhere are set, and he continued: "Whether it be security from bombing from the air, or from mass destruction, whether it be security from want, disease, and starvation; whether it be security in enjoying that inalienable right which every human being should possess of living out his life in peace and happiness, people throughout the length and breadth of the world are demanding security, and freedom from fear."

"It is the objective before us all today—to try and find the means of bringing that to pass."

Sir Arthur Salter, head of the British shipping mission, who represented Lord Halifax, British Ambassador, at the dedication ceremony, praised the part Norway's merchant marine has played in the war since the homeland overrun.

"When Norway was invaded," he said, "the Norwegian government at once offered their great mercantile marine, freighters, tankers and passenger ships for service in the war."

"The great bulk of that fleet, with the exception of what was trapped in enemy waters, has since been carrying vital supplies in the war zone."

Praising the Norwegian seamen, Sir Arthur said that in one respect they bear a heavier burden than the British crews, for they are cut off from their wives and families "until the day when victory is won and Norway again is free."

Text of Address by Welles

The text of Acting Secretary of State Welles' talk at the laying of the cornerstone of the new wing of the Norwegian Legation yesterday:

We are met here today to join in the dedication of the new wing of the Norwegian Legation in Washington.

These ceremonies are surely symbolic of the hope and of the faith with which we meet.

Those of us who are citizens of the United States are taking part in these dedication ceremonies not only because of the welcome privilege which it affords us of rendering this tribute to our traditional friends, the heroic people of Norway, but also because we can thus best evidence our conviction that the Kingdom of Norway of the past, as we have known it, some day—and we trust that the day will come soon—will once more be free and independent.

We here in the United States will always remember the superb courage with which the Norwegian people fought in the defense of their homes and of their liberties against the overwhelmingly superior strength of an invader who had treacherously taken them by surprise. We know how bravely they are still fighting with their allies on sea and land in many parts of the world.

We shall always remember the heroism of their Monarch and of their Crown Prince. And we have heard with emotion the words of that same Monarch when he said to his people only a few days ago: "Hold out. Don't lose courage. And be assured that Norway will once again be free and independent, provided that we all continue to do our duty and our utmost to reach our goal in the battle which is now being fought."

An Act of Faith

Those words seem to us to exemplify the soul of a people which will never admit defeat and which will never be cowed by alien domination.

But in a larger sense, these ceremonies constitute an act of faith in the ultimate victory of the forces of human liberty; of the triumph of civilization itself over the forces of barbarism.

I feel that there are joined with us in spirit here today, as silent witnesses, the peoples of all of the other countries which have been plunged by the criminal obsession of world conquest of one man and of the satellites who surround him, there can come no peace until the Hitlerite government of Germany has been finally and utterly destroyed.

For I am confident that the cause of liberty and of freedom will not go down to defeat. The determination and courage of free men and women everywhere must now be exercised to the full limit of endurance until their victory is won.

And yet, I do not doubt that millions are asking tonight—millions in England and in China—millions of enslaved peoples in Norway and in the other countries now temporarily occupied—millions in the countries which have not experienced war—yes, and millions in Germany and in Italy—are asking, what does the future hold for us after this struggle is over?

Does the end of the present carnage mean only a return to ruined homes; to the graves of slaughtered wives and children; to poverty and want; to social upheaval and economic chaos; to the same gray and empty years of confusion and bitterness, so barren in vision and in human accomplishment, which marked the decades after the termination of the last war?

For the Better Day

It seems to me that those of us who are fortunate enough to be able to live as citizens of the free American republics have our great responsibility in the framing of the answer to that question. For we all of us now see clearly, if we did not before, that no matter how great our American capacity for defense may be, no matter how perfect our hemisphere system may become, our future welfare must inevitably be contingent upon the existence in the rest of the world of equally peace-minded and equally secure peoples who not only will not but cannot become a source of potential danger to us in the New World.

I feel it is not premature for me to suggest that the free governments of peace-loving nations everywhere should even now be considering and discussing the way in which they can best prepare for the better day which must come, when the present contest is ended in the victory of the forces of liberty and of human freedom, and in the crushing defeat of those who are sacrificing mankind to their own lust for power and for loot.

At the end of the last war, a great President of the United States gave his life in the struggle to further the realization of the splendid vision which he had held up to the eyes of suffering humanity—the vision of an ordered world governed by law.

The League of Nations, as he conceived it, failed in part because of the blind selfishness of men here in the United States, as well as in other parts of the world; it failed because of its utilization by certain powers primarily to advance their own political and commercial ambitions; but it failed chiefly because of the fact that it was forced to operate, by those who dominated it, as a means of maintaining the status quo. It was never enabled to operate as its chief spokesman had intended, as an elastic and impartial instrument in bringing about peaceful and equitable adjustments between nations as time and circumstance proved necessary.

Some adequate instrumentality must unquestionably be found to achieve such adjustments when the nations of the earth again undertake the task of restoring law and order to a disastrously shaken world.

Security of All People

But whatever the mechanism which may be devised, of two things I am unalterably convinced:

First, that the abolition of offensive armaments and the limitation and reduction of defensive armaments, and of the tools which make the construction of such armaments possible, can only be undertaken through some rigid form of international supervision and control, and that without such practical and essential control, no real disarmament can ever be achieved; and

Second, that no peace which may be made in the future would be valid or lasting unless it established fully and adequately the natural rights of all peoples to equal economic enjoyment. So long as any one people or any one government possesses a monopoly over natural resources or raw materials which are needed by all peoples, there can be no basis for a world order based on justice and on peace.

I cannot believe that peoples of good will will not once more achieve to realize the great ideal of an association of nations through which the freedom, the happiness and the security of all peoples may be achieved.

That word, security, represents the end upon which the hearts of men and women everywhere today are set.

Whether it be security from bombing from the air, or from mass destruction, whether it be security from want, disease, and starvation; whether it be security in enjoying that inalienable right which every human being should possess of living out his life in peace and happiness, people throughout the length and breadth of the world are demanding security and freedom from fear.

That is the objective before us all today—to try and find the means of bringing that to pass.

Not in vain the distance beckons."

Roosevelt 'Exposed' in Nazi Press as Mason

Berlin, July 22 (U.S.—A picture which the German press had promised would "tear the lid right off" the President sitting calmly and placidly amid a group of men all wearing Masonic aprons.

It was rushed here from Oslo as proof of what newspaper headlines had called the "sensational exposure" that Mr. Roosevelt is a Mason. (Who's Who and such standard reference books list Mr. Roosevelt's Masonic membership.)

The Nazi Party organ Voelkischer Beobachter set the pace for the blasting of the "Roosevelt bombshell" with a streamer headline proclaiming "Roosevelt—chief tool of Jewish Freemasonry."

Correspondents were able to identify in the group picture Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York, Justice Ferdinand Pecora, of the New York State Supreme Court, and three of Mr. Roosevelt's sons. A handout accompanying the picture said it was taken November 7, 1930, at an architect's house in New York.

The handout said it was found, together with a letter to the Oslo Masonic Lodge written from New York by Mason Knut Vang describing the picture as extremely confidential.

"Forget" Others

New York, July 22 (U.S.—Germany "disclosed" today that President Roosevelt is a Mason, but failed to report that these Presidents also were Masons:

Washington, Monroe, Jackson, Polk, Buchanan, Johnson, Garfield, McKinley, Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, and Harding.

Income And Wellbeing

Estimates of national income expressed in terms of money are never more than a rough and ready measure of national wellbeing. When times are normal, the rise and fall of national income indicate that people are enjoying more or less of the good things of life, provided prices remain stable. In other words, a rising national income is linked with rising living standards, and vice versa. Today, however, the same measuring rod cannot be used. National income has become an exceptionally unreliable measure of living standards because a large and increased proportion of our production consists of defense items instead of goods for civilian use. Indeed, the rapidity with which we are shifting labor and capital from production of civilian goods to defense goods indicates that before long civilians will be forced to accept lower living standards, despite the pronounced current rise in national income.

This prospect is not alarming, but, on the contrary, is encouraging. Civilian deprivations suggest that defense needs have not been neglected, as they would be by continued production of the comforts and luxuries that make for high living standards. And there is another thought in this situation of civilian deprivation. It ought to be voluntary as well as imposed. Civilians with increased purchasing power to use in purchasing a restricted supply of goods have a choice between saving and spending. If they save part of their income, they must do without certain material comforts, but they have something to show for it. If they spend all they earn, they boost prices, and are forced to accept lower living standards without having a reserve fund to compensate them for their deprivations.

First Things First

An idea came to one of our correspondents after he had spent many hours wandering through the maze of our Government offices. Have those who are seeking new office space in the apartment buildings in Washington, and throwing out the residents in the process, thought of making better use of existing facilities? The idea is worth passing on.

Envoy Of India

Flexibility and adaptability have enabled the British Empire to survive a long succession of trials and tribulations. These characteristics are again illustrated in the appointment by the British government of Sir Girja Shankar Bajpai as India's diplomatic agent at Washington. When he takes office Sir Girja, at present a member of the governor general's executive council, will be the first Indian to represent his country outside the empire. Reciprocally the United States has named Thomas M. Wilson, our consul general at Calcutta, as commissioner to India with the rank of Minister.

Hitherto India's foreign relations have been handled exclusively by representatives of the British crown. That was true in the past of all other parts of the empire as well. After the self-governing dominions had achieved full nationhood, however, they began to appoint their own envoys to foreign nations. Thus in Washington we have Ministers from Canada, South Africa and Australia, as well as from Eire, and an exchange of envoys with New Zealand is in process of being brought about. But India is not a dominion, and the handling of foreign affairs continues to be the prerogative of the British Raj. Thus the appointment of Sir Girja Shankar Bajpai foreshadows ultimate dominion status for India. Aside from the circumstance that it reflects the growing importance of that country as a supply center for all empire forces east of Suez, and as a strategic base that may prove of vital importance in case the Nazis overrun Russia, the action must be regarded as partial implementation of promises made by the British government to the Indian people that their wishes for complete self-government will ultimately be granted.

It might seem as if the cart had been put in front of the horse for India. In the case of Canada, Australia, South Africa and Eire, the creation of separate diplomatic relations with the United States and other countries followed autonomy. In India's case the converse is true. Tradition-bound as the British sometimes seem to be, they do not hesitate to modify tradition and create new precedents when circumstances warrant such action.

One Way To Confusion

When human life is imperiled by lawlessness, the public naturally demands prompt improvement of law-enforcement machinery. This is what has happened in Washington. The continuing crime wave and the findings of the House police investigation, indeed, seem to have persuaded our residents that almost any change would be a relief from present conditions. This is hardly the best approach. Accordingly, the chief problem at the moment is to give intelligent direction to the current drive for changes in our law-enforcement system.

Some of the essential reforms have been clearly indicated by the police investigation. The inefficiency of the Detective Bureau has at last been recognized, and a reorganization of that agency is under way. This reorganization has got off to a good start. The good work of Private Daniel Slattery and other members of the force in the city's latest case suggests that the department is already functioning more effectively. The fact that the House subcommittee and District officials are working in close cooperation is also a good sign. For real team work will be needed to make the Police Department an effective law-enforcement agency. The same need is patent for the purpose of preventing the adoption of some expedients which in the end might weaken the police force instead of strengthening it.

Let us think, for example, of what current legislation implies. Bills have been introduced in both houses of Congress to give the Federal Bureau of Investigation a large measure of responsibility for running down major criminals. The reasoning behind these bills is to the effect that the FBI operates more efficiently than the local police. Nevertheless the effect of the measures would be to create another police force in a city that already has five. Division of responsibility always produces confusion, and confusion is the forerunner of inefficiency. What is needed is a consolidation of law-enforcement agencies here instead of further dilution of their responsibility.

Of course, the local force should seek the cooperation of the FBI whenever its special facilities can be utilized to advantage. Wherever the fault lies, it is a matter of keen regret that no District policeman is enrolled in the National Police Academy now being conducted by the FBI. Surely it is obvious that men trained in FBI technique would be a great asset to the local force. We would go so far as to say that the police force of the Nation's Capital should be as efficient as the FBI. And it can be made so. But the way to improve it is certainly not to divide the responsibility for policing the Capital among many unrelated forces. The problem is one of reorganizing and building up the local department, and this is the problem that should be kept clearly in mind in evaluating current proposals for relief of an intolerable situation.

Propaganda Warrior

Total war, which means war between nations instead of between professional armies, has hoisted propaganda almost on a par with arms as an instrument of warfare. But the British have never been able to catch up with the Germans in this department, though the variations they are playing on "V" may mark a turning point. At any rate, with no department of government have the fighting British been more dissatisfied than with that of propaganda. Change after change has been made in the ministry of information, and now a new head has been appointed to take Mr. Duff Cooper's place. He is Mr. Brendan Bracken. The importance of the change lies in the fact that Premier Churchill has released his right arm for this job. For Mr. Bracken was his personal secretary. He is known to Americans as one of the ablest men in the younger Britain which never got its real chance in the Baldwin-Chamberlain era. He was, and remains, an M. P., but most of his gifts were devoted to finance and financial journalism. His reputation in both spheres echoed across the Atlantic, and that reputation was enhanced by his frequent visits. He is one of the Britons, incidentally, who is immediately at home in American society. Not many are, in spite of their best efforts. Mr. Bracken now has the thankless task of redeeming a ministry which hitherto seems never to have satisfied anybody. His journalistic experience on top of his natural talents are good omens that Mr. Churchill at last has found the right man for the job—a job which the new warfare has put among the foremost at the government's disposal.

Yankee Doodle

"Somewhere in England" there are 20 middle-aged Americans, members of a Home Guard unit, who had a perfectly wonderful time last Sunday at the expense of a British brigade. Acting as Nazi parachutists and Fifth Columnists, they "captured" an airdrome which was heavily guarded by troops of the oldest and most noted regiments of the empire. The Americans, led by Brig. Gen. Wade Hampton Hayes, the former commander of New York's old Seventh Regiment, planned their "attack" ingeniously, stormed brigade headquarters, dismantled the control switchboard, and captured maps and secret documents. Then they proceeded to truss up the British officers. To protests that the attack "came too early," they quoted field orders showing that they attacked at the first moment permissible under the regulations governing the maneuvers. And they told the British that "the Germans won't wait, either."

Here, indeed, is proof positive that if need be Americans can out-Nazi the Nazis. Gen. Hayes' unit, some of the members of which are reportedly on the paunchy side, sent out scouts to get the lay of the land, sneaked up to their objective, found the weakest point of defense, and poured through a gap of their own making. These may be Nazi tactics, but they were the tactics of American frontiersmen when there was no Germany in the modern sense—and no machine guns or Bren guns or Tommy guns, either. The Home Guard Americans, many of whom have been residents of England for years, naturally had no heroic illusions about reenacting the conquest of the American wilderness. But they seem to have proved that some aspects of Nazi infiltration, at least, are essentially the same as frontier tactics described in ever so many American books which have enthralled German readers.

Here is another example of the eclecticism of German war-making. Most people think the Germans originated the new methods, if not the science, of war, and, indeed, the Lindbergh argument that they are unbeatable gathers substance from this assumption. The fact of the matter is that they were the only people who wanted war. Therefore, they plucked ideas wherever they found them, and turned to account for war purposes even our amusement models, as, for instance, the movie "Hell Divers." The American "boys" in England are helping in a much-needed job of destroying the German myth.

Weber And Fields

It was the custom of Joe Weber and Lew Fields toward the end of their skit to engage in some hilarious quarrel, punctuated by explosive kicks in the pants, whacks of the slapsticks, and heaves of the custard pie. Then, when the howls of the audience were most convulsive, they would suspend the hostilities for a song and dance. In 1904, however, at the height of their popularity, Weber and Fields had a real quarrel which, minus the violence, seems to have resembled one of their mock quarrels on the boards. Thereafter for about ten years each went his separate way. But it was like the marching around in separate circles that they used to do on the stage. Neither was very funny without the other, and presently they were reconciled and reunited.

In the meantime a great deal of water had gone under the bridges of the show business. Though Weber and Fields were still household names everywhere, the laughter evoked by their antics was considerably less hysterical than it had been just before and just after the turn of the century. Several dozen pairs of imitation Webers and Fields on the two-a-day and four-a-day circuits had pretty well sated the popular appetite for German dialect comedy. Again they separated, this time in friendship, coming together only for occasional appearances. And now they have been separated forever by the death of Lew Fields at the age of 74.

It is doubtful if Weber and Fields even at their most ebullient could raise more than a few nostalgic smiles from a present-day audience. They belonged essentially to that American age of innocence when almost anything foreign was, ipso facto, grotesque. There probably was a day when the squat, stuffed, absurd and engaging figure of Joe Weber and the tall grotesque figure of Lew Fields embodied the not-too-intelligent American's concept of the "Dutchman" or German. Similarly their concept of Frenchmen was something like Alphonse and Gaston in the "Funny Papers" and their concept of an Irishman must have been somewhere between Chauncey Olcott and the characters in the Sullivan drawings. We are wiser now, if not happier.

Letters To The Editor

Discipline And Duty

Gen. Lear has a cordial invitation to play golf in my back yard. As the mother of six "exuberant" young Americans (one already a draftee, and two to go) and hostess to three others, I warmly opine that the general did right in administering a little of what young America needs—discipline, and that the young men and their associates will profit by the unique experience.

Let me assure those women's clubs that indignantly pass resolutions condemning Gen. Lear's severity that these youngsters who think nothing of driving 600 miles without a wink of sleep, who can play tennis all day long, who can swim, and swim in the hot sun till they're blistered—all in the interest of recreation and the more abundant life—are not going to be permanently injured by an extra 15-mile hike.

Even Congress is stirred to shake its emotionalism by the unheard-of resurrection of discipline on the American scene. Well, if some of those Congressmen who harp on somebody else's business like a bunch of back-fence gossip would keep their attention on constructive matters within their own field and let the generals run the Army, we'd have a better Army and a more useful Congress.

Most parents of the last 25 years have been so busy on being chums instead of parents that they haven't dared come within speaking distance of discipline and duty. Discipline and duty—two of the noblest words in the vocabulary of civilized people.

The United States was not built on a foundation of exuberant spirits gaily following the whim of fancy. It was built on a people hardened by the demands of a rigorous existence, when discipline was sensibly accepted as a necessary measure and did not give rise to reams of sob-sister oratory.

Even supposing the general did get personally peeved—that doesn't change the color of the boys' offense against military decorum. A. L. P. Alexandria, Va., July 18.

Our Own "V's"

In harmony with the British Victory program, and because we are supporting Britain with supplies and cash, why would it not be a good idea to take up the program here by printing a series of red, white and blue "V's" which could be cut out and pasted on windows, doors, and rear windows? ADON PHILLIPS, Bethesda, Md., July 21.

Profits And War Business

There has been general approval of especially high taxes on those who increase their profits due to war business and now we frequently hear demands for taxes of 100 per cent on all war profits. Such ideas spring from a profound ignorance of the function of profits in our society.

In our present hazardous position we cannot afford to throw such a wrench into the main gears of our producing machine. Let everyone who holds such ideas ask himself if he would invest his savings in the expansion of a munitions plant on that basis. If he were entrusted with the responsibility of investing the savings of others, would he think he would be faithful to his trust if he put those savings into the munitions business with the profits subject to a 100 per cent tax. Or does he think our munitions business doesn't need expansion? Or would he prefer that the Government supply all the additional capital required?

Certainly it is clear that the last course would be the best. It is clear that the Government will not supply the capital effectively. The last few years have proved, if any proof was necessary, the complete ineffectiveness and lack of foresight of our bureaucrats. When the war clouds were gathering six or seven years ago the executives of our munitions industries wanted to expand. They could get no capital from the general run of thirty people because of the well-advertised fact that there could be no war profits if we did have a war. They could get no appropriations from the bureaucrats in spite of the fact that the people, at the time, were overwhelmingly in favor of increasing our military forces. Certainly no intelligent person can be satisfied with our foresight in preparing for war nor that of the English who worked on the same principle as we. No one wants to perpetuate all this bungling.

All communications must carry the writer's name and address, though pen names are permitted at the editor's discretion. In fairness to other correspondents, letters should be held to 300 words. Letters are subject to condensation.

Mary Haworth

I wish to voice my appreciation of the efforts put forth by Mary Haworth in helping in the life adjustment problems of people who appeal to her.

Sometimes I do not agree with her prescriptions. She seems a little bit hard on "fallen men." However, I usually see eye to eye with her, psychologically speaking. Sometimes her articles contain phrases which might furnish food for thought for everyone. This morning, July 19, there was the advice "In our charitable conduct toward others, we must guard against (1) sentimentally indulging unworthy traits in their character at (2) irreparable expense to our own well-being."

This seems to be an age of over-indulging those we love to their own destruction and our own. The motive (that we want them to have an easier time than we had) is laudable but the consequences are dire. LAURA K. POLLOCK, Washington, July 19.

Landon

An emergency, such as we are now experiencing, is certainly no time for politics. Yet Gov. Landon indulges in the cheapest kind of politics when he says in this morning's Post: "Due to the President's bellicose attitude toward Germany, we are now forced to adopt a policy of arming to the hilt." Evidently Landon refers to (1) the President's consistent denunciations of Hitler as the aggressor, and (2) the passage of the Lend-Lease Act resulting in large shipments of supplies to Britain. It appears that Landon (also a small group in the Senate headed by Wheeler) desires strict neutrality so as not to incur Hitler's anger.

Gov. Landon is either naive to the nth degree or he is playing politics, because such a statement as his is simply ridiculous. Norway was strictly neutral; so were Denmark and Holland and Belgium. But did it get them anywhere? Maybe Landon hasn't read the papers during the past 18 months. C. R. G. Washington, July 22.

Pegler And Labor

Is the attitude which Westbrook Pegler displays against labor unions one of antagonism toward labor unions as such, or against the rottenness that exists within them? I hope it is the latter. I have great admiration for his fearlessness and courage in attacking union racketeers and gangsters. The law of libel would deter any common-sense columnist from making the charges that Pegler makes if they were not based upon absolute and provable fact. This being the case, as I assume it is, Pegler is performing a magnificent public duty.

But there are occasions when Pegler's judgment is warped. This has been particularly noticeable in his comments upon the naturalized citizen. Not all Americans are naturalized citizens. But Pegler would place American citizens in different grades. He, I presume, is a hundred per cent American. In no country in the world is nationalism so blatantly proclaimed, so ostentatiously demonstrated, and, after all, made so cheap as in the United States of America. Like American goods it is graded and we have the hundred per cent variety like Mr. Pegler, whom the stranger finds exceedingly difficult to define, and it is to be assumed from the establishment of this one hundred per cent grade that many others exist whose quality may be undecided, with some mathematical accuracy. Now this is not written in either a cynical or a satirical vein. It is a natural comment on an unfortunate circumstance. One never heard of a one hundred per cent Zulu, a ninety per cent Chinaman or a seventy-five per cent Hottentot. The French Canadian, the Hindu Sikh, the New Zealander, the Australian or even the South African Boer would gaze with wonderment if anyone asked him if he were a hundred per cent.

Vice President Adams had rooms at the Hotel New Yorker, as did Francis the Frenchman on Fourth Street. The head of the table was always reserved for Adams, and all the ceremonious forms were scrupulously observed. Adams, when he came to the White House, came to the house of Mrs. Sage before he began to "feel settled and at home."

One day Senator Aaron Burr took James Madison to call upon the beautiful and spirited daughter of his landlady and there in the candlelit parlor the future President spent many an evening with the beauty who was to dazzle another Philadelphia with her charms.

Like all great cities, Philadelphia had her very poor, but travelers from Europe were surprised to find no deep humility among them. They took the business of liberty and equality seriously and bowed down to no one. Many aped the wealthy, riding out in coaches and wearing clothes they couldn't afford, for the extravagance of the social leaders was infectious.

The dreary old Southwark Theatre was the wayward place. It was lighted with "oil lamps" obstructed the view. The aristocracy paid $8 for a box and, like the less affluent in the stalls, were served beer and wines between the acts. Washington was conducted to his box by a person in formal frock and powdered hair, bearing silver candlesticks.

On Front and Water Streets were the houses of importers and wholesalers. Ships arrived in spring and autumn with great boxes of goods which were stretched along the pavement to be opened. The retail merchants, mostly women, left their shops, "remarkable for the neatness to see the thrilling operation." Mrs. Whitehead kept a fancy dress goods shop which had "great show windows," where "exquisite cloths and dresses hung full length, after the manner of Bond Street in London."

Then, there was the store of "smiling Mrs. Holland" in South Second Street, and Mrs. Jane Taylor, at the sign of the Golden Lamb.

And if mildly wished to improve her mind, she might stop at Bell's Book Shop on Third Street. Although they had to pay far more than they would have in Bond Street, the ladies and gentlemen insisted upon the latest styles from Paris and London, and the elite of Philadelphia had an elegance found nowhere else in America.

Thus, the little Quaker City has become a bright oasis in the midst of Penn's Woods, which Talleyrand called "wilderness of forest as all as the world itself." CURTIS WHITE.

The Post Impressionist

Second Capital

The members of Congress and their families who moved with the Government from New York to Philadelphia found the second Capital of the United States quite bewildering. Its 60,000 inhabitants made its streets much more crowded than did the 35,000 population in New York, and the people were more reserved in manner.

Then, too, one paid more for everything in Philadelphia. Soon after arriving in the new Capital Mrs. Adams wrote to her daughter, "Every article has been almost doubled in price," and Jeremiah Smith commented that "you can't turn around without paying a dollar."

A visitor arrived by boat had a very bad impression of the city, since the wharves, surrounded by crowded and malodorous storehouses, were anything but attractive. However, those who rumbled in along Front Street by coach found a very compact city of considerable charm.

The principal streets were Front, Second, Third and Fourth. Beyond Tenth Street the many long roads, whence came nightly music made the region uninhabitable for humans. Business and fashion were enshrined in the streets east of Fourth Street and visitors marveled at the ease with which they could get about.

An English traveler observed that most streets were not more than 50 feet wide and reminded him of "the smaller streets of London." Gutters of brick or wood lined the pebble-paved wagon tracks, and rows of strong posts protected the pedestrians on the brick sidewalks. Butternut, willow and poplar trees brought from England shaded the way.

Gardens of old-fashioned flowers—lilies, roses, pansies—surrounded the substantial and sometimes elegant brick houses. The more pretentious estates, as in modern times, walled themselves in, and the wayfarer might get only a whiff of the rare blooms within.

Washington lived in the Morris house, as did all the Presidents succeeding him until the Capital was moved to the City of Washington. This house was one of the most distinguished in the city, a dignified residence of brick with two large lawns in front and ample gardens. Probably Washington grumbled a bit on rent day, for he paid $300 pounds more for it than he had for a "more elegant house" in New York.

If a visitor had the proper credentials he might call at this stately mansion and receive a solemn bow from the President and a cup of tea from his lady.

If, however, his social status was not sufficient to admit him, he must be satisfied with a glimpse of the great man as he strode from his gate between his two secretaries, Lear and Jackson, followed at a respectful distance by his aides, to take his daily walk.

From the journals kept by tourists we learn that the Inns of Philadelphia were not of the best. O'Leary's was famous for the assembly dances. There, in a ballroom 60 feet square, from an Indian Queen, one end and walls papered "after the French style," society partook of an "incomparable punch" and trod a stately measure. The City Tavern was the scene of important political discussions. From an Indian Queen, friends of Fisher Ames lost their linen and $30,000 in securities.

The Golden Lion, called also the Yellow Cat, was renowned for well-drawn beer and porter, which was drunk from pewter mugs. It was to the rooming houses that the members of Congress went for more comfortable and sanitary beds. These houses had the air of being private homes of gentlemen accommodating persons of quality.

Vice President Adams had rooms at the Hotel New Yorker, as did Francis the Frenchman on Fourth Street. The head of the table was always reserved for Adams, and all the ceremonious forms were scrupulously observed. Adams, when he came to the White House, came to the house of Mrs. Sage before he began to "feel settled and at home."

Then, there was the store of "smiling Mrs. Holland" in South Second Street, and Mrs. Jane Taylor, at the sign of the Golden Lamb.

And if mildly wished to improve her mind, she might stop at Bell's Book Shop on Third Street. Although they had to pay far more than they would have in Bond Street, the ladies and gentlemen insisted upon the latest styles from Paris and London, and the elite of Philadelphia had an elegance found nowhere else in America.

Thus, the little Quaker City has become a bright oasis in the midst of Penn's Woods, which Talleyrand called "wilderness of forest as all as the world itself." CURTIS WHITE.

The Nazis In Latin America

AT LEAST FOUR EVENTS and statements of the last few days must be considered together:

1. The Nazi putsch quashed in Bolivia.
2. Under Secretary of State Welles's statement that the United States has information that Germany is planning new steps of aggression against remaining independent countries in Europe—namely Spain and Portugal. (There are only two others, Sweden and Switzerland.)
3. The President's declaration to Congress: "I do believe—I know—the danger of today is infinitely greater. (Meaning "than a year ago.")
4. General Marshall's testimony before the Senate Military Affairs Committee that the United States has been in imminent peril for two months and that if he held all he knew it "might result in something like the sinking of the Maine or the Zimmerman note."

LINDLEY The putsch in Bolivia was not imaginary. The Bolivian government had documentary evidence that a conspiracy to overthrow it with the aid of pro-Nazi Bolivian army officers was being planned by Nazi agents, working through or in close cooperation with diplomatic representatives of the Nazi government.

The date for the putsch had not been set. A well-informed guess is that it would have been timed to coincide with similar attempts in a few other Latin-American nations. All of them might have been synchronized with a Nazi move into the Iberian peninsula and the shoulder of Africa.

Serious Nazi activities in Latin America may seem implausible now while the main Nazi armed forces are engaged in the invasion of Russia. But many military observers believe that the Nazis, even if they have not destroyed the Russian regime, will have pushed what is left of the Russian armies to the Urals by mid-September. Then, it is conjectured, they will turn their attention to Spain, Portugal, the South Atlantic islands, the shoulder of Africa, and South America.

IN OUR GOVERNMENT there are, broadly speaking, two schools of thought concerning Nazi activity in Latin America. One is that it is intended to divert our attention from the main theaters of war, to make us hesitate to give all the aid of which we are capable to the British. As a rule, but not in all cases, this view is held by those who think that if Britain goes down, we are lost.

The second view is that, whatever the motive, a serious Nazi thrust toward the lower half of this hemisphere is being planned and that it must be frustrated, by armed force if necessary.

But among our well-informed officials there is no doubt that Nazi activity in Latin America is being intensified. It is passing from propaganda of a general type to what appear to be definite plans for action.

Suppose that about the time the Nazis headed into Spain and Portugal, there were putches in several Latin-American countries. Suppose also that the Nazis should succeed in landing troops in the Azores or the Cape Verde Islands. With such forces as we now have, we would face a serious military predicament.

As Gen. Marshall pointed out, the Marines had to be sent to Iceland because regular Army units contained selectees and reserve officers whose terms of service, under existing law, will soon expire. The Marine Corps units in Iceland have had special training in landing operations under fire. They might be needed in case of trouble in Latin America or if the Nazis got to the Azores, and selectees can be sent anywhere in the Western Hemisphere, the present one-year service law for the latter two is an effective barrier to their use in Brazil, let us say.

WE ARE PLEDGED to the defense of Latin America. Many Latin-American army heads have had their advanced training in Europe, including Germany. Some of them perhaps admire the Nazi scheme of things. Many of them, in any case, have indicated doubt about our ability to defend the Western Hemisphere. The Nazis know this and are capitalizing on it.

The idea, accepted by some of our isolationists, that the defense of the Western Hemisphere is easily within our capacity, does not seem to have made much of an impression on some of the military leaders in Latin America. They want proof, and lacking it, tend in some cases to gravitate toward the Axis.

As a soldier, Gen. Marshall is not given to loose talk. When he alluded to an incident like the sinking of the Maine or the Zimmerman note he was not speaking idly. In World War I the notes of Chancellor Zimmerman of Germany offered Mexico definite inducements, including the recovery of Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona, to ally itself with Germany in the World War.

THE ZIMMERMAN NOTES probably were intended only to divert our energies. But one can never be sure when some Nazi-influenced government or group may take the bait. Gen. Marshall did not indicate whether he was referring to a certain Latin-American nation or to Japan. But he plainly indicated that he knows that the Nazis are offering specific inducements to certain nations to ally themselves with Germany in war against us.

The President's strong references to defense of the Western Hemisphere in his message to Congress underlines the same situation.

Beneath the Bolivian counter-punch and the statements of the President, the Chief of Staff, and the Acting Secretary of State there is plenty of TNT in our own backyard.

Enough

Justice Frankfurter

LAST WEEK, while Harold Ickes was berating Charles Lindbergh again for running with the Nazis, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was entertaining something called the Summer Student Leadership Institute, which is being run by something else called the International Student Service, at the private suite of the President of the United States on Campobello Island, near Eastport, Me. Mrs. Roosevelt wrote of these activities, social and intellectual in her column, and mentioned that Justice Felix Frankfurter, of the United States Supreme Court, was among those present. Justice Frankfurter was "playing it easy" with the students and gave a "number of interesting talks" and a "lecture."

Justice Frankfurter is the one who wrote the opinion holding that any organization might, without penalty, interfere with interstate commerce in a jurisdictional strike involving no labor dispute and that Congress intended that the victim of false representations by such a group resulting in a boycott would simply have to pocket his loss.

HE ALSO has held that an employer has no right to refuse to hire a union member, even though the applicant be a Communist, although the Government itself asserts and exercises the right to discriminate against Communists, regardless of their union membership.

Justice Frankfurter is one of the most influential men in the United States, not only because of his social and political intimacy with the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, but, more objectively, through the loading of the Government with aggressive lawyers who studied under him.

I am, to my regret, unacquainted with either the Summer Student Leadership Institute or the International Student Service, but I doubt that many Americans are acquainted with them. An "institute" is easily organized and a "service" may be equally fictitious. There are literally dozens of organizations containing in their titles the words "youth" or "student" and the Communists have been active in many of them as the Dies Committee showed, no thanks to Mrs. Roosevelt, in the winter of 1939.

HOWEVER, I see a clew to the character of these two groups in the fact that the Communist picture section there appeared again the countenance of Joseph Lash, an inveterate youth who has been active in the youth business for at least a dozen years and who was identified with Communist Front youth organizations in testimony taken before the Dies Committee. Lash admittedly was a Socialist, and thus an enemy of the American economy on which the American system of government is based, and he is executive secretary, the key job which the Communists always strive to control, of the American Student Union.

Of this organization, Congressman Martin Dies wrote that it was "completely under the control of the Communists." Of the same organization, J. B. Matthews, the backslid bolo who turned out to be an old comrade and became an informer for the Dies Committee, wrote that it was "a Communist united front."

Another authority on Communist activity under the cloak of innocent titles, Benjamin Stolberg, also identified with the Communist effort, the organization of which Lash was in effect, the head man, Lash was one of those misunderstood youths whom Mrs. Roosevelt entertained not once but twice at luncheon in the White House the time that she attended the sessions of the Dies Committee to manifest her disapproval of the inquiry into Communist activity in the guise of youth organizations and her partnership for the individuals under investigation.

AS TO THE DETAILS of the sessions at the President's own summer home there was no newspaper report beyond Mrs. Roosevelt's own writings which sometimes are rather sketchy. The nature of the Frankfurter's counsel to the eager young people sitting at the feet of wisdom may be surmised from the trend of his opinions and teachings. On this he spoke, and that of Lash's past associations, however, it is difficult to quell a slight flutter of apprehension that American capitalism escaped a very severe wiggling and that collectivism and communism, which are the kernel of both Hitlerism and Communism, got rather the better of the encounter.

Mr. Ickes, who speaks with the consent and approval of the House and keeps a still tongue in his head when his remarks are deemed inopportune, is alert to suspect the motives and objectives, indeed, even the American loyalty of private citizens who run with Nazis, and so am I. I can't trust anyone who can trust a Nazi, but I go further than Mr. Ickes. For I can't trust anyone who can trust a Communist or anyone who runs with them.

Mrs. Roosevelt doesn't meet the same test that Ickes applies to Lindbergh, and Mr. Frankfurter, too, must expect to be known by the company he keeps as well as by the slant of his decisions.

The Danger Which Confronts Us

THAT "nightmare of coalitions" which troubled Bismarck and troubled William II troubles Hitler, too.

The Fashner is fully aware that it was an impressive coalition of powers—the United States included—which defeated Germany in 1918. He realizes also that a similar danger confronts Germany again. For while no single nation is today strong enough to smash the Third Reich a combination of powers may be able to do so. That is why every move Hitler makes on the gigantic chessboard of war and diplomacy is primarily designed to prevent the creation of such a coalition.

This is not a new game which Hitler is playing. He has been playing it, and with remarkable success, ever since he came into power eight and a half years ago. At that time the combination of powers capable of being welded into a coalition against the Reich was truly formidable. In the west Germany had to reckon with France, then unquestionably the most powerful nation on the continent; France's ally, Belgium, and Great Britain, which had assumed obligations under the Locarno pact to resist any change in the status quo in the Rhineland. In the east Germany faced Poland, another French ally, and, beyond Poland, Soviet Russia, whose foreign policy steadily assumed an anti-German orientation after the Nazis took over the government of the Reich.

To the south were Czechoslovakia, Austria and Italy. In addition to those potential enemies Hitler also had to reckon with the power which, under effective leadership, the League was in a position to wield against an aggressor.

HITLER had no allies when he began his march toward world power, no allies except the timidity and stupidity of those whom a malign fate had placed in charge of the governments at London, Paris and elsewhere. But these were all the allies he needed. The combination that could have stopped him in his tracks never was formed. From the first, Hitler was able to take care of his enemies one by one.

As Winston Churchill pointed out in his great speech of October 5, 1939, on the morrow of Munich: "When I think of the fair hopes of a long peace which lay before Europe at the beginning of 1933, when Herr Hitler first obtained power, and of all the opportunities of arresting the growth of the Nazi power which have been thrown away, when I think of the immense combination of resources which have been neglected or squandered, I cannot believe that a parallel exists in the whole course of history."

NOW, OF ALL "the immense combinations and resources" to which Churchill referred there is left only those represented by Great Britain, Russia and the United States. To win the war Hitler must prevent that enormous aggregation of force represented by those three powers, and particularly by Great Britain and the United States, from simultaneously being thrown into the scales against the Third Reich. That may be the imperative reason why—though Stalin would have been prepared to pay a great price for peace—Hitler never gave his fellow-dictator an opportunity to dicker but suddenly hurled his legions against Russia. For as long as the Russian army and air force remained unbroken, there was always the possibility that the Soviet Union would enter the fray against the Third Reich. The presumption was it would choose the moment to do so when Germany was engaged elsewhere.

With Great Britain unconquered, with the power and might of the United States increasingly exerted on behalf of Britain, Hitler could not afford to permit Russia to exercise that choice. He had to smash the potential coalition of Russia and Great Britain while the British were still too weak to invade the continent and thus create a real two-front war and while the United States was still only on the periphery of the conflict.

As long as Great Britain survives there would be no immediate danger of a Nazi invasion of this hemisphere. Nor would Hitler attempt that at this time even if he could. But by creating a state of turmoil in the content of our south, by creating a quivering regime in one or more points he might so plague and perplex the United States as to make it difficult and perhaps impossible for this Nation to render all possible aid to Great Britain. That happened in Bolivia—abortive and premature as it proved to be—should be warning enough for Americans who have eyes to see.

FCC Will Open Hearings Today On Newspaper-Radio Policy

Its authority challenged in advance, the Federal Communications Commission will open hearings today to determine "what policy or rules, if any," should be promulgated for future acquisition of radio stations by newspapers.

Well ahead of the hearings, the American Newspaper Publishers Association, which has more than 425 members, and the Newspaper-Radio Committee, representing more than 100 persons with both newspaper and radio connections, branded as unconstitutional any attempt by the commission to adopt special rules discriminating against newspapers.

The publishers' association, through Elsie Hanson, its general counsel, also challenged the commission's authority to conduct the inquiry.

Long debated on Capitol Hill, before the commission and elsewhere has been the question of newspaper ownership of radio stations.

In several decisions the commission has denied licenses to newspapers when it considered a rival applicant equally qualified.

In ordering the investigation in mid-March, the commission said it "did not imply that it is opposed to newspaper ownership of radio stations in general or in any particular instance," adding that "the purpose of the hearings and the investigation is to obtain for the commission sufficient information so that it will have a rational

Gallup Poll

Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., July 22.—Are British factories producing the maximum possible amount of war material?

That question came to the fore in last week's debates in the British Parliament and the discussion of it achieved such importance that Prime Minister Churchill had to promise a "full and comprehensive report" to the House on the British war production effort.

A survey of British public sentiment by the British Institute of Public Opinion, affiliate of the American Institute, shows that a majority of British voters do not think their war production is as great as it could be. For every voter who is satisfied, there are more than two who are not satisfied—a factor which helps explain the stormy debate in Parliament.

As a matter of fact, the proportion of Britons who are not satisfied with their factory production is almost exactly matched in the United States, where the majority in a recent survey likewise said they were not satisfied with American defense production.

The British survey follows: "Do you think that we are producing in our factories the greatest possible amount of war material?"

Yes 21%
No Opinion 25%

In the United States the American Institute recently conducted a survey on the following issue: "Do you think America's production of arms, airplanes and other war materials is going ahead fast enough?"

Yes 39%
No Opinion 17%

72% of Britons Think U. S. Will Enter War

Seventy-two per cent of British voters polled by the British Institute of Public Opinion think that the United States will eventually come into the war. This is substantially lower than the proportion of American voters who also think the United States will enter the war.

The latest poll in the United States by the American Institute indicates that 83 per cent think the country will go into the European war sooner or later, while 12 per cent do not think it will and 5 per cent express no opinion.

The British Institute survey shows that nearly one-half of British voters—43 per cent—think Britain cannot win without American entry into the war.

Rising Prices

By Mark Sullivan

Suggestions For Remedy

THAT PRICES of many commodities have been rising everybody knows. That they will continue to rise is commonly apprehended. One well-informed anticipation is that the cost of living will rise some 10 per cent within a year or so.

A partial explanation of this is the preparation for war. Preparation for war causes the Government to pour out great quantities of money—probably the public as a whole has more spending money now than at any other time during ten years past. The public, having this money, wishes to buy things with it—automobiles, refrigerators, washing machines and the like.

But we must bear in mind that preparation for war does a second thing. It consumes great quantities of materials—aluminum, copper, steel and so on. Because war preparation consumes so much of these commodities, there is not enough left to make the usual supply of ordinary goods—automobiles, refrigerators, and the like. So much is this so that the Government goes almost to the point of putting a limit on manufacturers, requiring them to make only a fraction of as many goods as they ordinarily would.

CONSEQUENTLY when the public, with money in its pockets, sets out to buy automobiles or washing machines or what not, it finds the supply limited. It is a simple condition—increased quantity of money accompanied by reduced quantity of goods. Whenever that condition exists, prices rise.

As remedies, certain suggestions are made. One is, that in order to reduce the quantity of money people have for spending they be required to pay more taxes. Actually, a new tax law is being written, with rates very much higher. But this tax bill will reduce only slightly the quantity of money the public has to spend. The reason is that most Federal taxes are laid on a comparatively small proportion of the population. A great quantity of the new spending money is in the hands of persons who commonly pay little or no direct Federal taxes. The tax remedy is not likely to be effective in preventing rise of prices.

Another suggestion is that everybody be required to use a portion of his spending money for buying defense savings bonds, instead of merely being persuaded, as at present, this is not likely to be adopted. Yet another suggestion is that there be a price administrator, a price fixer, with power to say, in his discretion, as to any commodity, that the price shall not go higher.

The explanation of rising prices which assigns preparedness for war as a cause, is true as far as it goes. Persons in the Administration like to give this explanation, because it puts the responsibility on the war. But there is an additional cause for rising prices.

THE ADMINISTRATION set out, eight years ago, to increase the prices paid farmers for their crops. In effect now the law provides that farmers shall receive for their crops what is called "parity price"—that is, the same price, in terms of purchasing power, that they received 30 years ago. Whether this price is too high, or not high enough, is not here in question. All that is pertinent here is that prices of farm crops have been made, by law, higher than they otherwise would be.

Higher prices for crops means higher cost of food and of most clothing—in short, higher cost of living. Higher cost of living means demand for, excuse for, and in fact justification for, higher wages.

At this point a spiral begins. Higher wages mean higher cost of manufacture, hence higher prices for what farmers must buy. Higher prices for what farmers must buy becomes justification for still higher prices for crops. Higher prices for farmers for crops would be made justification for higher wages to workers. And so on, and still farther on.

IF A HIGHER LEVEL of prices, a higher cost of living, even to the point where inflation would begin—if this cannot be prevented except by checking prices of crops and of wages, then the check will be difficult to achieve. The increase that has already taken place in the prices of crops is largely due to direct action by the Administration and Congress. The increases that have already taken place in wages are also due largely to actions and policies of the Administration and Congress. These two groups, farmers and workers, are a large portion of the electorate. Most of them are well-organized. The leaders of both groups understand the technique of pressure upon Congress and the Administration.

Undoubtedly Congress will take account of the rising cost of living, and will consider measures to check it. Within the Administration, a measure is being incubated to send to Congress. The fact that a measure of this kind comes from the Administration does not have as much weight with Congress as was formerly the case. On measures having directly to do with war and preparedness, much of Congress defers to the Administration—but not necessarily so on measures not directly associated with defense. Any measure or measures that are introduced will lead to a wide-ranging debate.

Baton Rouge Utility Strike Goes to Defense Mediators

The Labor Department last night certified to the Defense Mediation Board the two-week-old strike of Baton Rouge, La., utility workers. Meantime, two board panels sought to settle second strike and resolve the issues of a dispute which threatens to curtail vital radio parts for Signal Corps equipment.

The board last night dispatched telegrams to the A. F. of L. Electrical Workers Brotherhood and the management of the Gulf States Utilities Co., emphasizing the importance of supplying power to defense plants in the Baton Rouge area, and calling on both parties to refrain from action that might aggravate the dispute or spread the strike to curtail defense power.

In Washington a board panel met throughout the day with management representatives of the Air Associates, Inc., Bendix, N. J., and officials of the C. I. O. United Auto Workers Union, which struck the factory on July 14. The plant, which fabricates aircraft parts, was the scene of strike riots. The union seeks reinstatement of several employees who, it alleges, were fired for union activities, and has demanded a new bargaining agreement.

About 525 are employed. The board panel consists of Frank Graham, public representative; Cy Ching, employer member, and Hugh Lyons, labor representative. Meetings also were held yesterday and adjourned until this afternoon on the dispute involving the Breeze Corporation, Inc., Newark, N. J., where a three-day strike was postponed at the Mediation Board's request after the case had been certified.

The C. I. O.-U. A. W. had demanded a union shop with checkoff and a 10 per cent wage increase. The plant, which employs 520, makes radio parts on Signal Corps subcontracts. The board panel is comprised of Charles Wyzanski, for the public; Eugene Meyer, representing employers, and John Brophy, representing labor.

Bill Cunningham's Column:

By Bill Cunningham

As all things must, the mighty DiMag's record-breaking hitting streak stopped on the figure 56, and that's where it jells into the books of the future. If it carried footnotes along, these would be some: He upped his batting average more than 50 points during the run; he went more than from 6½ games behind to 7 games in front.

Cleveland being the front runner his feat shoved into second place, you might even say he battled Cleveland out of the pennant race; he smashed 14 home runs, 4 triples, 16 two-baggers and 56 singles, for a total of 156 bases, this averaging practically two hits and three bases per game; he now owns all the records in this particular department, having established the minor league record in this specialty in 1935 with a figure of 61 . . .

Somewhere in there, too, a faint assist should be recorded to the credit of his teammate, Tom Henrich. About two-thirds of the distance through the string a situation arose wherein Joe had gone hitless, Henrich was up, and a double play would end the ball game, shutting DiMaggio off from another time at bat. Clubbing the missile carefully so as to sacrifice only himself, instead of taking a free swing and seeing what happened, Henrich saved the batting chance for his teammate, and DiMag came through with the safe rap that kept the string living . . .

A home town fight of proportions has broken out in Brooklyn over the proposal to have the Dodgers play their World Series home games in the Yankee Stadium. It's really a blazer, with merchants, civic organizations and the borough's biggest newspaper mixing in eagerly. They already see in it nothing but another subway series, the Dodgers vs. the Yanks.

An anomaly of parts was the sight of Arky Vaughan, who whacked two home runs in succession in the All-Star game, polishing the planking on the Pirate bench while Frankie Frisch stuck with Alf Anderson. Although Arky is captain of the club, he was benched prior to his All-Star heroics, and Frisch followed the time-honored custom of not breaking up a winning combination. The Pirates were red hot with young Mr. Anderson in there . . .

Now that the draft limit has been lowered under their years, one wonders if there'd be much of a howl if Hank Greenberg and Hugh Mulcahy were detached from the service even if subject to recall in an emergency, and allowed to proceed with their baseball careers? They're the only two major leaguers who really got nabbed despite a lot of others who were called up and looked over. Maybe the precedent would be dangerous, but both went, both are sacrificing heavily, and both could be spared. Both have served, and are serving, as models for young Americans. I think if I had a vote on it I'd furlough 'em for the rest of the season. How about you? . . .

Bernie Bierman believes in hard summer work for his football players. At least ten of his regulars are doing hard manual labor in Midwest defense plants. Most of the rest are working in steel mills, on roads, in iron mines and such. To play hard-way football, you've got to be in hard-way shape. You can't get it sitting on stools or leading the hounds at some race track exclusively. To keep his crew football-minded, Bierman mails each man at regular intervals some plays to look over and criticize . . .

Managers Casey Stengel and Frankie Frisch were observed having dinner together in a Boston restaurant the other evening, in such earnest converse that neither was touching his food. It harbingers trading . . . Among those who could feelingly send regrets, if they dared, upon the demise of the DiMaggio batting streak, are the mag-nates around and about. There hasn't been such a box-office attraction at large since Babe Ruth was whaling 'em a mile. The crowd of 50,000 in Chicago the Sunday before the siring ended cleared the White Sox for the year, and the 67,468 who viewed the end of the run at Cleveland probably won't be equaled again, not even by World Series play . . .

HANK GREENBERG

A large phoot to the Army for trying to make Cupid a commissioned officer. The new regulation forbidding nurses to date enlisted men, upon the grounds that nurses have officers' rating and that enlisted gentlemen are thus beneath their official status, is another item to file in the "Yoo Hoo" department. Nurses don't drill the young men. They can't give 'em orders. There wouldn't seem to be any conflict between dancing and discipline. A gal, still in this land, has a right to go around with a swain of her choice. How about those who are engaged to draftees and the likes? What have they got to do, smuggle notes until it's over?

How to Be a Sophisticate

Mrs. Aurelia Puffer-Swagg, noted authority on front, is substituting in this column for Mrs. Henrietta DeGossey, who is on vacation. Today Mrs. Puffer-Swagg presents the first of a series of catechisms on how to be important socially.

Q—What is the first rule for the would-be sophisticate?

A—To learn to let the other fellow do the hurrying, the waiting and the waiting—then work.

Q—How should she wear it?

A—By following the slow school of action—or by contracting a case of hookworm.

Q—What should she always remember in attending social events?

A—Never to be on time, and never to apologize.

Q—How should the sophisticate dress?

A—In something as different as possible from what others are wearing. However, it is not so important what she wears, as how she wears it.

Q—How should she wear it?

A—As if she had on the right clothes and everyone else had on the wrong ones.

Q—What should appear to be the sophisticate's chief interest in life?

A—To get hold of a cigaret.

Q—For whom should she be eternally hunting?

A—A match or an ash tray.

Q—What is the sophisticate's first rule in conversation?

A—To utter commonplace slowly and importantly as though she were handing down pearls of wisdom.

Q—What should be her second rule?

A—To know all the answers and to give them with an air of authority.

Q—What should be her attitude on all questions of the day?

A—That there is something back of them that the average person doesn't know.

Q—What should be her attitude toward public leaders?

A—That they are all either stupid fellows or smart rascals. She should also be up on the latest rumored scandals about their personal lives.

Q—Of what should the sophisticate's conversation chiefly consist?

A—The newest plays and books and the latest gossip about safe society.

Q—What should she say about a new play she has seen?

A—That it is "good in spots" but has a bad first act—or last act or middle act.

Q—What should she say about a new book?

A—That the author—whom she calls by his first name—has written himself out.

Q—What should she say of an art exhibition?

A—That it had "one or two good things."

Q—What should be her general attitude toward everything she sees and hears?

A—That it was "simply terrible" or "triflingly dull."

Q—What should be her attitude toward persons she meets?

A—She should regard them with glazed eyes and a far away look—unless they happen to be very important.

Q—What should the sophisticate say about safe society?

A—It doesn't matter—just so she speaks familiarly of everyone mentioned in the gossip columns.

Q—What else should she remember in conversation?

A—To have a number of wines, politics, and scandals.

Q—What should the sophisticate especially guard against?

Porous Girdle Solves Sports Figure Problem

By Jane Driscoll
The Post Fashion Editor

Wearing a girdle in the summertime is one of the greatest bugbears of women. Yet, very few women have perfect enough curves to go unarmored—even if they have kept those so-called "girlish figures."

Many women, especially those who are most active, are opposed to "girdles" because they say they're hot and handicapped them in their sports activities. Now manufacturers have met this challenge by making a girdle that is cool and lightweight in smooth liquid latex.

This seamless all-occasion girdle is just as appropriate for wear under a swimming suit as it is under an evening gown. The pantie girdle style is especially ideal for wear when bowling, playing tennis or golf and swimming. The seamless garter type is also a boon to the housewife or the girl who sits at an office desk by day.

So that women may actually see the adaptability of these two styles of girdles for sports, work or evening wear, a model will demonstrate them at a local department store beginning today. When you don brief shorts, such as those worn by Actress Anna Lee (above), you will see how much neater you appear when a pantie girdle, such as the one at right, is worn.

Woman Loses Weight, Finds She's Orator

By Ida Jean Kain

THIS SLIMMING story of our home maker, who made herself over in the form of a serial and it has a happy ending. Remember some time ago I told you about a girl who weighed 118 pounds when she was married, but whose weight had gone up to 182 pounds in five years? Well, now I can tell you she has lost 50 pounds.

Our heroine is Helen Kopp, of Elkhart, Illinois. A chance remark—which was never intended for her ears—started her on her slimming program. Someone said, "What an ungainly figure you have! You look like a pig!" And on the spot Helen determined to reduce. By the good old calorie and exercise method she lost 40 pounds and wrote me as follows:

"I want to thank you for helping me to a much happier life. Aside from a new figure, I have gained so much confidence that I even spoke before a P. T. A. meeting without getting stage fright. And tonight I have charge of the program for our Junior Women's Club."

Mrs. Kopp had done so well of her own accord that I urged her to finish the job. We worked out the special exercises needed to slim the hips, thighs and waistline—plenty of leg swinging and circling and stretching and twisting. She is now down to 128 pounds which, because of her large frame, is perfect for height of five feet, three inches, and she is so beautifully proportioned that she can wear a size 14. We don't have a record of her measurements at her top weight, but here are the measurement changes from October to June, 1941.

MEASUREMENT	THEN	NOW
NECK	34 1/2	32 1/2
WAIST	38 1/2	34 1/2
SEAT	44 1/2	42 1/2
THIGH	34	30 1/2
LEG	24 1/2	22 1/2
ANKLE	14 1/2	13 1/2

It wasn't always easy. Every once in awhile she would write: "You'll be disappointed in me—I am in myself. I haven't lost. The pull is particularly tough right now."

But she never gave up. Now she feels better than she has in years, and her skin is nicer than it was before she started reducing. And is her husband proud of her? By the way, he deserves some credit, too. While Helen was slimming down, he encouraged her by taking hikes and playing tennis with her.

In her last letter, Helen writes they're predicting around town that her weight will soon be right back where it was. I don't believe it. She is too pretty and is having too much fun ever to let herself get fat again.

Teach Yourself To Type at Home

SO NOW you've graduated—and you're looking toward the business world, wondering "How can I fit in?"

Teach yourself to type professionally and you'll have a skill that's a good entree into any business.

A simple keyboard chart makes the touch system clear sailing. For, of course, you can't meet office standards by "hunt and peck" methods of typing. Finding keys by touch is much quicker and more accurate.

The idea is that your fingers should always operate from the eight guide keys. From them you can nimbly reach any other key on the keyboard without looking. Bend fingers at second joint so they are about in line, then place little finger of right hand on key marked "r"—other fingers on "i," "e," "o," "u." Put little finger of left hand on "a"—others on "s," "d," "f."

Mary Haworth's Mail

Woman's Affectionate, Helpful Interest in Niece Turns to Tearful Hostility When Man She Admires Starts Courting the Girl; Latter Asks What to Do

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am an unmarried woman, 30 years old, and my problem concerns a jealous aunt, who has always shown much pride and interest in my life. She is now 56. When I graduated from high school and from a college of music, it was my aunt who brought my graduation and recital outfits. Any little success I have ever achieved has given her great pleasure.

But recently I have become the object of her cold displeasure. We are now almost completely estranged, and I am at a loss to know what to do. For 18 years, she and my uncle have had in their home, as paying guests, two bachelor brothers. One of these men, now 47, began about 18 months ago to pay me some attention. For almost a year, we went about together and had wonderful times. We are most congenial and have the highest respect for each other, as our tastes, ideals and standards are the same.

To clarify the story, I shall call the man John. Almost from the start of my close friendship with John, my aunt began registering disapproval, with unkind jibes directed at each of us separately; never when we were together. Her remarks were not so much intended to hurt our feelings as they were meant to show resentment of our interest in each other. At first, I didn't get the meaning of her conduct; it was so unreasonable. I was kind and forbearing toward her for months, and tried to reason with her, to no avail. Finally, I just stayed away from her home.

But after six weeks, I went to see her again and found her in the same frame of mind. Now, it has been two months since I have seen her, and the same strained feeling still exists. She has made it impossible for John and me to see each other in peace, and I have decided to stay away from her until she sees the error of her ways and reforms. Should I tell her of my intention? Or just let her infer it from my actions?

I know now that she is insanely jealous of John, and I believe this jealousy is largely due to her fear that he just might want to marry me; and that, if he married me, she would lose both his familiar presence in her home and his valued contribution to the household income. She doesn't think anyone could take his place. She has often said so. I haven't seen him for three months now, although he sent me flowers on my birthday, six weeks ago. Twice he came to our house on business, while I was away; and he may think I am deliberately avoiding him.

He is sensitive and he knows I have been avoiding him. The last time I talked with him, three months ago, he said I was the only person who could do anything for him; that she thinks nothing in this world is too good for me. I believe she has him hoodwinked into thinking I am ungrateful; and yet the situation is not of my making. Is there anything I can do, indirectly, to renew our friendship and regain his affection? And what is the right thing to do about my aunt? She looks very ill and seems unable to help herself. She is extremely dependent and spends much time in tears.

During the past 15 years, she has had more than a dozen operations, with no apparent serious aftereffect, except for her recent strange behavior. For these reasons I have tried to be especially considerate of her. But I myself am almost ill, as a result of worry over the situation. It is dreadful to be cut off from two persons who, in their different ways, have meant more to me than anyone else in life. John has a birthday next week. Should I send him a greeting? (I failed to send my aunt a card on her birthday recently.) Your advice on this whole baffling problem will be greatly appreciated.

LORENA G.

Solicit Man's Help In Healing Breach

DEAR LORENA G.: My advice to you is to be little concerned, in this instance, with placating your emotionally upset, unreasonably interfering aunt, and to be deeply concerned about strengthening your friendship with John. If you can establish with him an understanding, mutually helpful alliance, based on a policy of joint passive resistance to her unfriendly attacks, you will have placed her in a position where she has no choice but to accept the fact of your friendship. It is obvious she will never voluntarily promote or endorse it.

Even though you haven't seen or talked with John for three months, it seems to me he has given evidence of continued interest, during that period, by calling twice at your home and remembering your birthday with a gift of flowers. Therefore, it would not be amiss for you to send him a friendly greeting on his birthday—perhaps even a modest gift, carefully chosen, to reflect your thoughtful awareness of his tastes or his need.

Since you are convinced that your aunt has sought to hoodwink him into believing you are an unfeeling, ungrateful niece, I think you should act boldly to correct that false impression. You can do this and in so doing bid indirectly for "renewal of friendship with him," by getting in touch with him some time soon, for the

V Motif Predominates At Norwegian Affair

Nation's Determination to Oust Nazis Apparent at Ceremony Dedicating New Chancery; Official Society Attends

By Dudley Harmon

The letter "V"—but not for Victoria—was the motif at the moving dedication ceremonies and reception yesterday afternoon at the Norwegian Legation. Even the little white paper cocktail napkins had the symbol printed in one corner, and at the foot of the curving marble staircase leading to the second floor was suspended from the ceiling a large "V" made of evergreens.

It's been months since a European legation was the scene of as brilliant a gathering as met at the Norwegian Legation yesterday. But, as somebody remarked, "No one has ever given a party dedicating a new chancery building before." Minister Morgenstjerne said as much in his speech, adding that the new building symbolized more an idea than a masonry construction. The celebration was for Norway's determined spirit to carry on for victory until the last Nazi has been made to leave the country.

Nowadays, there's just as much news in who isn't at a party as who is. Missing from the reception at least as far as I could see, was Finnish Minister Procopio, but present, beaming and chatting French with their colleagues, were the Russian envoy and Mme. Oumansky. The Finns, of course, are fighting Russia, but Mme. Procopio is English—all very complicated.

Though the champagne and the thin sandwiches yesterday were as at every big diplomatic party, the reception was really unlike any other given here in gayer times. Instead of the usual light-hearted chit chat, everybody clustered rather solemnly on the rooftop beside a battery of newsreel and photographic setups to hear addresses by Crown Princess Martha, the Minister, Sumner Welles, and Sir Arthur Salter, British food mission head, who represented Ambassador Halifax.

Princess Wears Blue and Orchids

The princess had come down from her summer home on Buzzards Bay to raise the flag over the chancery addition and read a brief speech in a very moved voice. She looked just as one would expect royalty to look in a street length tunic dress of azure blue and a tilted black straw sailor with a curling black coq feather on the crown. A necklace of pearls, pendant earrings of sapphires surrounded by diamonds, a corsage of lavender orchids and long black gloves completed her costume. Beside her every minute stood the two who go everywhere where royalty does—the court chamberlain and lady in waiting. "Please," announced a voice over the loud-speaker installed on top of the new building, "some of you are asked to go down in the garden. The engineers have told us that this roof won't hold more than a hundred people safely." Everybody waited for her neighbor to leave, but after urging from the loud-speaker, some descended. Surely more than 100 were left, and a few people expected to hear masonry cracking at any moment.

At intervals along the roof were huge vases with clusters of gladioli in shades of red and lavender. Two bands played gaily, one on the lawn and the other on the roof, which opens out from the library. In that room a bar was set up, while in the dining room tea was poured by ladies of the legation staff. Here and there: Receiving with the minister, his wife and the crown princess were two members of the Norwegian cabinet recently arrived in this country. Sven Nielsen, minister without portfolio, and Nils Hjeltnet, minister of church and education, are here to do business for the Norwegian exiled government in London. Though this is their first trip, both speak perfect English. Later they plan to visit Norwegian colonies in the Middle West.

Everybody who is anybody in Washington official circles was there. Col. William Donovan came early and after a look around departed. Defense Chairman William O. Knudsen hurried in too late to see the ceremonies. Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, cool in lime green with a matching hat, sat with Mrs. Sumner Welles and Mme. Espil directly in front of the microphone. Mrs. Wallace is leaving for the West tomorrow.

Mrs. Welles, who seldom appears at afternoon parties, watched her husband intently as he read his speech. She was beautifully dressed as usual in a navy blue dress with white embroidery on the shoulders and a white bare sort of hat. Mme. Espil's hat was fashioned of white feathers and had a wisp of veiling.

Mme. Loudon Here From Massachusetts

After the ceremonies Mexican Ambassador Castillo Najera congratulated Mr. Welles on his speech. The Undersecretary replied in Spanish. Mrs. Adolf Berle, subsecretary after her vacation at her summer home in the Berkshires, mingled in the throng on the roof. Mrs. Richard Casey proved that black is still the coolest-looking shade for summer. The Neville Butlers said good-by to friends, for they leave shortly for England. Mme. Loudon, wife of the Netherlands Minister, and a picture in pale blue, came from her summer home at Nonquitt just for the dedication. Senator Theodore Green said to Minister Morgenstjerne in leaving: "It was a very moving event." . . . Representa-

Coyne, financial attaché of the Canadian Legation; and H. F. Carill, chief British representative, chairman of the International Wheat Advisory Committee.

Also Leslie A. Wheeler, director, Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations, Department of Agriculture; R. M. Evans, administrator, Agricultural Adjustment Administration, Department of Agriculture; Harry C. Hawkins, chief, Division of Commercial Cereals and Agreements, State Department; Jacques J. Reinstein, Lloyd V. Steere, agriculture attaché at the American Embassy in London; Andrew Cairns, secretary, International Wheat Advisory Committee; Paul H. Appleby, Undersecretary of Agriculture; Will Clayton, deputy Federal loan administrator; A. G. Black, governor of the Foreign Credit Administration; Howard R. Tolley, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Department of Agriculture, and, from the State Department, Lynn R. Edmister, Laurence Duggan, James Clement Dunn and Philip W. Bonsal.

Miss Creelman To Be Wed Soon

New York, July 22.—Mrs. James Creelman today announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Eileen Buell Creelman, motion picture critic of the New York Sun, to Frederick Morgan Davenport, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Davenport of Washington, D. C., and Clinton, N. Y.

The wedding will take place in St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Marietta, Ohio, in mid-August. Miss Creelman is a daughter of the late James Creelman, war correspondent, editor and author. Her mother is the former Alice Leffingwell Buell, a direct descendant of Gov. William Bradford of the Plymouth Colony, and of Gen. Joseph Buell, Revolutionary hero, pioneer of Northwest Territory and one of the founders of Marietta.

Miss Creelman, a member of the Colonial Dames of America, was educated at Mrs. Randall Mac Iver's classes, the Veltin School and Rosemary Hall.

Gores Attend Tennis Tourney At White Sulphur

Capt. Albert Gore, United States Army, and Mrs. Gore, of 4422 Garfield Street, Washington, are at the Greenbrier in White Sulphur Springs, Va., this week for the annual West Virginia State open tennis championships which began on Monday at the Golf and Tennis Club. Also participating are Bernard Welsh, defending champion, and Mrs. Welsh, of Rockville, Md.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard A. Sneed, of Washington, have arrived at White Sulphur to occupy their remainder of the summer. With them are Mrs. Sneed's mother, Mrs. Ida H. McCoy, and her sister, Mrs. L. L. Miller, of the Kennedy-Warren here. Their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Harvey, of Kenwood, have returned home after staying at the cottage for several weeks.

Weekend visitors at the Greenbrier who have now returned to town include Mr. and Mrs. S. N. Honaker, Harry Stockwell, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Kincaid, Mrs. William B. Kerkam, Jr., and Mrs. Theodore Gill.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

TWO FOSTERS—though no relation—have become engaged. The bride-to-be is Miss Ann Foster, of London, England, now working at the British Embassy, and Edward Carter Foster, of Glenville, The Plains, Va., is her fiance. Announcement of their engagement is of much interest to the hunt country.

Miss Foster is the daughter of Arthur Foster, of London, and the late Mrs. Foster. She was sent here two and a half years ago by the foreign office and has been living with her cousin, Miss Edith Lawton, also of London, in an apartment at 2200 Nineteenth Street.

Mr. Foster is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. James F. Foster, of The Plains, and grandson of the late Capt. and Mrs. Edward Carter, of Warrenton. He is a cousin of Mrs. B. Lauriston Hardin, Mrs. W. H. Irwin Fleming and Mrs. Philip Knox, all of Washington.

MISS FOSTER, an ardent horsewoman, came to Virginia to ride and her romance started in the hunting field during the fox hunting season last winter. The engagement was announced at a party given the other afternoon by Miss Edith Lawton.

Several Virginians attended the event. Among them were Mr. Foster's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Turner Foster, and his sister, Mrs. Jane Foster Palmer, with her house guests, the Misses Hetty Carter and Susan Carter, of Philadelphia. Also Mr. and Mrs. Hargrave Cunningham, Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Carter, Miss Polly Knox, Miss Elizabeth Turner with her fiance, Daniel Cox; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Little, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Johnston, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Kirkpatrick, Mr. and Mrs. Macon Reed, Mr. and Mrs. Glen Perry, Miss Muriel Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. Troy Rodin, Miss Marian King, Miss Mary Love Henry, and from the British Embassy, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Gunningham, Mr. and Mrs. D. W.

Hennessy, Mr. and Mrs. George Payne, Miss Pamela Whitley, Miss Margery Backhouse, Miss Laura Phinister and Miss Alice Kelley. The young couple plan to be married in the fall.

ANOTHER ENGAGEMENT of wide interest to Virginia is that of Miss Hylton Rucker, daughter of Mrs. Edwin Samuel Rucker, of the late Mr. Rucker, of Farmville, to Thomas Glasscock Slater, of Upperville, son of Mrs. Tiesis Fletcher Slater and the late George R. Slater, of Upperville. The announcement was made yesterday.

Miss Rucker, who makes her home in Washington, was graduated from Greensboro Woman's College in North Carolina. Mr. Slater attended the McGuire School in Richmond and was graduated from V. M. I. in 1932. He is the grandson of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Slater and the late Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fletcher, of Fauquier County. Miss Rucker and Mr. Slater spent the past weekend with his mother at her home, Rose Hill, and attended several parties, including a buffet supper given by Mrs. Charles D. Sabin and a cocktail party held by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fletcher. Their home, The Maples, was the home of Mr. Slater's great-grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Fletcher.

The couple will be married August 8 in Washington in the presence of the immediate families. Miss Rucker is an enthusiastic horsewoman and plans to hunt with the Piedmont Hounds next fall.

THE REV. and Mrs. Oscar De W. Randolph, of Lynchburg, have returned to their home after a visit to his cousin, Dr. Archibald Cary Randolph, at Grafton, near Upperville. Dr. Randolph came here to officiate at the funeral of Mrs. Archibald Cary Randolph, who was buried on Saturday. The late Mrs. Randolph was greatly beloved and will be long and deeply missed.

Miss Darlington Engaged to Wed Lieut. Bernard

Mrs. Herbert Seymour Darlington, of New York and La Jolla, Calif., has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Sibyl Mary Darlington, to Lieut. J. Pierre Bernard, U. S. N. R., son of the late Mr. and Mrs. George R. Bernard, of New Orleans.

Miss Darlington attended the Spence School in New York and was graduated from the Bishop's School for Girls in La Jolla, Calif. She is a member of the Colony Club and the York Club of New York City, and of the Junior League of San Diego, Calif. Her father, the late Herbert Seymour Darlington, of Philadelphia, was the son of Joseph G. Darlington and Mary Washington Butcher, of that city, and on her mother's side her grandparents were the late Gen. Thomas Hamlin Hubbard and Sibyl Amelia Fahnestock, of New York City.

Lieut. Bernard was graduated from Annapolis in 1933. In 1939 he resigned from the Navy to enter civil life and was active for a number of years in the investment banking business in New York City. In December of last year he left his firm and shortly thereafter reentered the naval service. He is now on active duty at the Navy Yard here as aide to Admiral Feltgen. Lieut. Bernard is the brother of Mrs. Robert C. Rand, of New York. He is a member of the University Club and the Lunch Club of New York and the Army and Navy Club of Washington.

Herberts to Leave Friday on Sea Trip

Mr. and Mrs. John L. Herbert will leave Washington Friday for Baltimore, where they will board the S. S. Fairfax for a sea trip to Boston and environs. They also will visit Norfolk and Williamsburg. They plan to return to their home here in about ten days.

Mrs. Lorenz Urges Consumers to Curtail

A challenge to consumers to help win the "Battle of Production"—by expedient buying and by curtailment of waste—was stressed in an address yesterday by Mrs. M. O. Lorenz, former president of the District League of Women Voters, in the league's series of morale-building programs.

Mrs. Lorenz, who is chairman of the sub-committee on consumer interests in the District Defense Council, spoke over Station WWDC on "The Consumer in Defense."

She pointed out that consumers would have to forego some purchases of materials—such as aluminum—vital to national defense, and said that purchases of certain articles might have to be rationed later.

Commenting on wastefulness in America, she said that "many families throw away enough food to keep a Belgian family." She added that "we discard clothes before they are half worn-out. We drive autos when a walk would do us good."

Doubtless some of the things which have been regarded as necessities "will have to be regarded as luxuries" during the emergency, she said.

Mrs. Lorenz expressed belief in the growing readiness of consumers to help win the battle of production by sacrifices, and in eagerness to carry on "the American tradition of defending democracy—defending the democracy we have and building a better one—in which each shall work for all and all for each."

"We ask only to know the facts. We believe that the people of America can face facts, that they will rise to meet whatever the situation," she added.

The local league, in union with similar groups over the country, is promoting the "Win the Battle of Production" campaign, a project of the National League of Women Voters.

Pen Women's Group Gathers Aluminum

Pieces of aluminum—to which bits of family history clung—turned up at the shower which the District branch, National League of American Pen Women, held yesterday afternoon for the defense program.

Mrs. Eva Grant Marshall, a member of the league, brought the pot in which she made her first cup of coffee when she went to housekeeping as a bride, more than 25 years ago.

Mrs. Bertha Shanks Chaney, a vice president of the branch, gave a pot which she had used in Manila and in China.

Mrs. Cora Frear Hawkins brought a lower plate of false teeth, made and worn by a Pennsylvania farmer.

The branch held its shower for members and friends at its studio in the Grafton Hotel.

Mrs. H. Lyle Campbell, president of the branch, was assisted by Mrs. Chaney and Mrs. Edward R. Seal, vice presidents, in receiving scores of contributions.

Alpha Gamma's New President Returns Home

Mrs. C. M. Jansky, Jr., who has been elected grand president of Alpha Gamma Delta Fraternity, has returned to her home in the Tilden Apartments after attending its biennial convention in Asheville, N. C.

After having served as first grand vice president, she was elevated to the new position at the convention.

Mrs. G. H. Sigel, of Arlington Ridge Road was named new Alpha Province chairman. Red Cross and war relief fund activities were reported at the convention. From its international treasury, Alpha Gamma Delta had agreed to match, dollar for dollar, up to $500, the war relief funds raised by each of the five Canadian chapters. These chapters reported a total of $4,292, to which the fraternity treasury contributed an additional $2,350.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

With two new units being formed this week, American Knitters will then have five flourishing groups turning out garments for war sufferers. Fingers, hurrying with knitting and sewing, will have another task when they slow down—the writing of letters to a group of British knitters.

Miss Myrtle-May Smith, who is director of American Knitters in her spare time from her position at the Government Printing Office, this week displayed a letter, written by eight British knitters and referred to her by the District Chapter of the Red Cross.

The letter, addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, asked her to put the British group in communication with an American group of knitters for correspondence. The letter was passed on to the Red Cross.

The British group wrote: "We live at Hawkenbury, a district on the outskirts of the county town of Royal Tunbridge Wells in the County of Kent, in what was described in the 'Battle of Britain' as the 'Interception area.'"

After a description of the sights and sounds of the air battles last fall the letter stated: "But for the time being, at any rate, we hear more pleasant sounds."

"Since August, 1940, we have knitted 863 garments, chiefly for the Navy and get plenty of funds for buying wool, by subscriptions of one penny a week and upwards from friends and neighbors. We also hold knitting parties and whist drives at each other's houses."

"An interchange of letters and news with a similar group in the United States would be acceptable, especially now when holidays away from home are practically nil, petrol short, and the small cars which used to give us weekends by the sea, either sold, laid up for the duration or used only for business. Your side may be interested to know how we live here on the edge of things, with our small suitcases always standing in the hall ready packed 'just in case'... but we still find life very good."

The letter ended on a cheerful note, "Who knows, after the war, when your big bombers will be made over into transatlantic airliners, we may be exchanging weekends with one another."

Miss Smith was instrumental in starting the American Knitters here in March, 1940, with a group which meets at the Hay-Adams House every Wednesday morning. Since then about 125 women have registered for this unit. In addition, about 75 signed up for the Monday evening group which meets at the Red Cross Chapter House, and about 50 for the Thursday evening group at the same location.

Mrs. Lee, who will preside at the meeting, is sponsoring Mrs. Foster, Miss Foster, and Mrs. Francis V. Stone, new members who will be given the obligation Friday evening. They will be initiated in a class of new candidates September 26, in connection with the Publicity Chapter Night program. The class will be the result of the membership campaign now in progress and scheduled to close September 12.

Mrs. Moorfield, Dr. Goodbar Will Speak Over WWDC

Mrs. Amelia B. Moorfield, president of the New York Women's Press Club, and Dr. Octavia Goodbar, also of New York, junior past president, National Federation of Press Women, will be honor guests on the "Women Who Achieve" program, conducted by Mrs. Edward R. Seal and Miss J. Jeanne Carter, over Station WWDC at 3:30 p. m. today.

Both visitors have varied club affiliations. Mrs. Moorfield is the National Opera Club of America, the Contemporary Club of Newark, the National Federation of Press Women, the International Association of Aeronautics for Women, the League of Women Voters, the Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

Dr. Goodbar is now serving as chairman of the International "Books Across the Seas" committee, the radio committee of the New York Federation of Women's Clubs, and of the press and radio committees of the Women's Press Club of New York City. She is a member of the Mayflower Society of Maine, the New England Women's Press Association, the Harvard Women's Club, and of the University Women's Council of Boston.

Ten Volunteers Join Y. W.'s Room Registry Group

Mrs. Robert N. McMillen, acting chairman of the room registry committee of the Y. W. C. A., presiding at a meeting yesterday instructed the 10 new volunteers from the Central Volunteer Bureau in examining homes to be recommended to girls as living quarters.

Miss Elizabeth Haney, general secretary of the Y. W. C. A., and Miss Florence Hillengas, room registry secretary, addressed the recruits who are offering their services to ease the strain of accommodating the many girls coming here to work in the defense program.

Promotion Due 'Cop on Beat' In Attack Case

Private Daniel Slattery, of the Twelfth Precinct, "the cop on the beat," who received Congressional commendation for his part in the arrest of the attacker of an 18-year-old girl, was recommended for promotion to precinct detective yesterday.

The recommendation was forwarded to the District Commissioners by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, shortly after the House Police Investigation subcommittee called in Slattery for a public tribute to his "remarkable piece of work."

In Walter Reed Hospital, meanwhile, Private Lawrence McCullough, a District selectee stationed at Fort Meade, Md., identified Slattery's prisoner in connection with the attack.

Holand Junior Lindsey, 19, Negro, of no fixed address, has been charged with assault with intent to kill and with rape and is being questioned at the Twelfth Precinct station in an attempt by detectives to discover if he has any connection with other attacks on women in Washington.

"Stranger on the Beat" Lindsey is accused of beating and slashing McCullough and assaulting his 18-year-old girl companion in the Patterson Woods near Bladensburg Road Northeast Saturday night.

Slattery sent his partner, Private James G. Beach, to arrest Lindsey because of the striking similarity between the girl's description of her attacker and his own recollection of the "stranger on the beat" whom he stopped and questioned four or five hours before the crime was committed. Slattery told the subcommittee.

"I am very proud of this officer and the Commissioners, I am sure, will place on his official record a credit for meritorious service," Commissioner J. Russell Young told the subcommittee after Slattery had recounted how Lindsey was arrested. Lindsey has signed a confession to the crime.

Slattery's apprehension of the subcommittee and District officials, in executive session in the District committee room, were engaged in going over recommendations for reorganization of the police department on the basis of revelations made during the recent police investigation, when Slattery arrived.

The closed session was adjourned and reporters were called into the hearing room. Slattery appeared in the case, as though uncertain of the subcommittee's intentions in summoning him to appear. He was reassured at once, however, by Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, the chairman.

"Come on, officer; we want to congratulate you on the remarkable piece of work you have done," said Schulte. "Sit down and tell us about it. We noticed in the newspapers you were successful in the apprehension of a criminal. Tell us about the method you used."

Slattery told of spotting the stranger while cruising in a scout car a few hours before the crime was committed, of stopping the man for questioning and of making him display his social security card for identification. The man told him, he recalled, that he recently had come from North Carolina and had a job with a bottling concern near the crime scene.

"The next day when I was given a description of the man who had committed the crime and was told he had a card case, it started things going around in my mind," Slattery related. The card case, it was recalled, was displayed by the attacker when he posed to the couple as a special police officer.

The subcommittee was impressed by Slattery's account, particularly because during the investigation it was repeatedly brought out that the policeman on the beat, familiar with the neighborhood and in a position to know when strangers arrive, is the backbone of any police department.

Brown to Retire on October 15

enforcement of regulations and decreased personal injuries in Washington. The record of leaving after-collision cases shows that between January and June, 1946, before the squad was formed, the entire Police Force charged only 91 motorists with the offense. Between January and June this year two policemen—Privates A. D. Clarke and H. H. Carmichael—accused 86 drivers of the offense.

In January alone, the Accident Prevention Squad charged 31 drivers with hit and run. During the same month in 1946 only one hit-run case was made. More than 4,000 motorists were charged with traffic violations during the first six months of this year, the records show. It is estimated that this is at least a 20 per cent increase over last year.

Despite popular belief that the A. P. U. patrolmen make arrests only where there has been an accident, statistics show that 100 more arrests were made where there was no accident than were made at accidents.

An increased number of driving permits have been suspended for traffic violations this year than last year, as a result of recommendations by the A. P. U. There has been centralized control of all traffic work since establishment of the A. P. U. Inspector Arthur E. Miller pointed out last night. Prior to the formation of the squad both the Traffic Division and police precincts would investigate traffic deaths, "getting in each other's way," he stated.

At present, he said, the A. P. U. handles all traffic fatality cases, thereby relieving other patrolmen of the burden of attending inquests and court.

Increased convictions of drivers involved in traffic deaths have resulted in the past six months. Possibility that a desire for "more men on the street" will recall 13 police privates engaged as schoolboy patrol coordinators was expressed by officials.

Such a move was described as "unthinkable" and "deplorable" by members of the Traffic Advisory Council.

The policemen detailed to handle the schoolboy patrolmen in the precincts have full-time assignments, guarding street corners in and around schools. They instruct the boy patrolmen and lecture the school pupils in traffic safety.

A partial "housecleaning" of the Police Department already has been accomplished.

Both assistant superintendents—Inspectors Lewis I. H. Edwards and Bernard W. Thompson, chief of personnel and detectives—have retired, at the request of Maj. Brown.

Inspector William G. Stott, supervisor of police equipment and property, was ordered retired along with four detective sergeants and a lieutenant.

Acting Lieut. George Darnall, chief of the homicide squad, was demoted and sent to the check squad as a detective sergeant. His position was filled by Detective Sgt. Jeremiah Flaherty, who was made an acting lieutenant temporarily.

It was Commissioner Young who paved the way for an investigation of the Police Department, saying he was determined to give Washington "the best police force money can buy."

He interested the other Commissioners in a probe by municipal authorities to determine what could be done, and the inquiry was ready to proceed when Congress took an interest in the matter and created a subcommittee to investigate the force.

The Commissioners' special investigation committee, in fact, sat in on the Congressional hearings and is expected to make recommendations of its own. The committee consists of Maj. Beverly C. Snow, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, chairman; Walter Fowler, District budget officer, and Maj. James Lusby, District disbursing officer.

Schulte Seeks Emergency Fund To Add 200 to District Police

Representative William T. Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, yesterday announced he will ask members of the House Appropriations Committee to sit in joint session with his Police Investigation Subcommittee to consider an "emergency" appropriation to strengthen the Metropolitan Police Department.

Schulte's subcommittee will meet tomorrow to put in final form an investigation report which, it already has announced, will recommend addition of 200 policemen to the force.

Funds to pay the salaries of that many new officers—$380,000—as well as money to buy two-way radio equipment for 25 additional police cars will be sought in the joint meeting, Schulte declared.

Representative George H. Mahon (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the District Appropriations Subcommittee, will be asked to arrange for the meeting, Schulte added. Mahon last night said he would be "glad" to sit with the investigation subcommittee.

"We want 200 more men on the force, we would like to see the department get 25 more two-way radio cars, and we want to get them now," Schulte declared. "But the appropriations committee has got to recommend the funds."

With the investigating subcommittee virtually ready to make report to the full District Committee Monday, the committee on civic affairs of the Washington Federation of Churches, made public letters to the chairmen of the Senate and House District Committees calling for "joint action" in naming a "board of inquiry to investigate the needs of the Metropolitan Police Department."

"Such board should consist, in part, of qualified experts and the citizens should have adequate representation on it," declared the letter, signed by Wilbur La Rue, Jr., committee chairman. "The inquiry should be judicial and should extend over a sufficient period to insure adequate findings and conclusions."

At the same time, the Government Printing Office Post of the American Legion forwarded to the House District Committee and the Commissioners copies of a resolution praising the "courageous testimony" of Capt. Harvey G. Callahan, of the First Precinct. Callahan, an investigation witness, testified to the existence within the department of a so-called "Gestapo," a police squad that spied on policemen.

"In so exposing this un-American and absolutely nonessential activity within the Police Department, Capt. Callahan exemplified to the highest degree the praiseworthy, efficient and high caliber qualifications of modern police officials and performed an outstanding civic duty to the citizens of the District," the resolution stated.

Mahon pointed out that the usual procedure for the District in obtaining funds beyond its budget is for the Commissioners to submit supplemental estimates to Congress via the Budget Bureau. These, he said, are handled by the Deficiency Appropriations Subcommittee on which he, as District chairman, would be invited to sit.

The 1942 District Appropriation Act carried funds for 75 additional policemen and for 25 two-way radio cars.

Need for additional policemen was demonstrated to the subcommittee in the testimony of several witnesses during the investigation. Inspector James F. Beckett, for one, told the subcommittee that beats of 80 blocks and more are not uncommon in some police precincts.

U. of Md. Coach Rallies After 3d Transfusion

Coleman Headley, 28-year-old University of Maryland track coach who has been fighting for his life in University Hospital, Baltimore, since he was shot at a tavern near Laurel on Sunday night, rallied slightly last night. Physicians said there was a possibility he might recover, although his condition was described as still critical.

Headley was given a blood transfusion yesterday morning, the third since he was admitted to the hospital. During an operation Monday doctors were unable to remove the 28-caliber bullet which penetrated his stomach and lodged in a muscle near the spine.

He was shot following an argument between a friend, John E. Cullen, Jr., of Laurel, and Guy Constantine, proprietor of the Evergreen Tourist Camp. According to Maryland State police, Headley and Cullen had objected to a slot machine which they said would not pay off.

Army and Navy Need Physicists Soberly

Physicists are sorely needed by Uncle Sam. As one civil service official explained, the last war was a chemists' war, but this one is a physicists' war. Physicists are wanted by the War and Navy Departments and the new Office of Scientific Research and Development to develop apparatus for the detection of planes and submarines. Almost all the physicists in the country are listed on the Civil Service Commission's National Roster of scientific personnel. And most of them have jobs. Only 250 physicists were graduated last June and Uncle Sam alone could use four times that number.

To make the greatest possible use of the physicists available, Dr. Joseph C. Morris has been brought here from Tulane University to help the National Roster and the National Research Council to fit physicists into the defense jobs for which they are best suited.

Criminal Division of the Justice Department has asked Congress for funds to hire 23 additional attorneys and 10 more stenographers. . . . Arthur L. Nelson has been transferred to the Division of Timber Management in the Forest Service where he will supervise forest planting work. . . . United Government Employees has asked Interior Secretary Ickes to appoint 10 Negro members of the Park Police force. The union also is demanding an immediate raise of $60 for all Federal employees here.

Officials of the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance of the Social Security Board have returned from Chicago where they looked over space in the Merchandise Mart. The bureau wants to move its 1,800 employees out of here to Baltimore where they can work with its 4,700 employees there. However, adequate space to house its 6,500 employees and heavy equipment hasn't been found in any Eastern city or Chicago; or at least space that is suitable. It would cost $1,000,000 to move the bureau to Chicago and for that money a pretty good building could be constructed here or nearby. A building might have to be built unless a suitable one can be found soon.

Pay Rises Delayed

Pay rises under the uniform promotion plan, which has been approved by Congress and is now awaiting the President's signature, can't be made until October 1, in the opinion of the men who wrote the bill. The bill says that raises under it can be given "at the beginning of the next quarter immediately following the effective date of this amendment." October 1 is the beginning of the next quarter. Others insist that the bill can be made retroactive to July 1. The lawyers will have to decide what Congress intended.

A UFWA delegation yesterday again demanded of Gerald Reilly, Labor Department solicitor, that Helen Miller be reinstated immediately. The answer was again no. Mrs. Miller was suspended on charges of communism and she will have a hearing tomorrow before L. M. Walling, chief of the labor standards division. The C. I. O. union hasn't decided whether it will accept the hearing before Walling. It wants a hearing before an impartial board.

The union yesterday announced that J. P. Kennedy, a New York Veterans Administration employee, had been cleared of charges of communism pressed by the FBI. At the FBI, however, it was said that Kennedy had not been under investigation. The FBI did investigate Helen Miller after it had been requested in writing to do so by Labor Secretary Perkins. . . . Frank Rylick, former Washington newspaperman, has been retained by UFWA to publicize the Miller case.

Meantime, a new employer organization has sprung up at United States Housing Authority that has had its troubles with the UFWA. The UHHA Association is seeking to organize the unorganized and to elect one of its number to the appeals board to hear efficiency rating complaints. The organizers are Jean Coman, Edward Harding, Betty Miller, Cleora Osborne, Charles Alldredge, T. J. Carlson, Eli Trucken, and Carl Hulbert. More than 100 employees have joined the new group, which already has been dubbed by unionists as a "company union."

Girl's Slayer Silent At Morgue Inquest

Keeps Eyes Lowered During Proceedings, Declines to Testify

Guy Edward Oden, 19-year-old theater usher, was held without bail at the District Jail last night, charged with the murder of Ellen Reid Cannon, 15, his schoolgirl sweetheart.

The youth accused of firing three shots into Ellen's body last Saturday, was "held responsible" by a coroner's jury yesterday and remanded to jail to await the action of the grand jury.

The hearing at the District Morgue lasted only 35 minutes, with five witnesses appearing. During the time, Oden sat holding his head, never raising his eyes above the table in front of him.

After each witness, Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald asked the defendant if he had any questions to ask. Each time Oden, who was not represented by counsel, shook his head negatively.

First witness was Detective Sgt. Aubrey M. Tolson, who obtained a statement from Oden the night after the fatal shooting.

Girl's Sister Testifies

The detective said Oden told him he had killed Ellen about 11 months and that they "were going steady."

The girl's parents refused to let Guy see their daughter about two months ago, Tolson stated. Despite this fact, he said the youth told him he continued to see Ellen almost every day.

Saturday, Tolson declared, Oden said he had a date with Ellen and she was to meet him at Fourth and O Streets Southwest at 1 p. m. When she didn't show up, the youth went to her home.

Ellen's sister, Mrs. Helen Louise Yates, of 114 O Street Southwest, told of Guy's coming to her home where Ellen was. She said he asked for the girl and she told him she was not there. Ellen had instructed her to do so, she said.

"He pushed me aside and called me a liar," Mrs. Yates asserted. "He followed Ellen to a back room and then I heard a noise like a lot of fireworks exploding."

Declines to Take Stand

She told the jury that Oden showed her a gun about a week ago and that he made a statement regarding Ellen that "nobody else will have her. I'll kill her."

Detective E. E. Scott, Ninth Precinct, who arrested Oden a short distance from the O Street home, said the youth told him in response to a question of what the trouble was, that "she lied to me too much."

After testimony was completed, Dr. MacDonald asked the defendant if he wished to take the stand. "It is my duty," the coroner stated, "to tell you that you do not have to testify. If you do, I want you to know that whatever you say may be used either for or against you."

In a voice which was barely audible, Oden replied, "No, sir."

D. C. Red Cross Sends Shipment to Britain

Thirty-seven huge packing cases containing various articles of clothing and surgical bandages left the District Chapter of the Red Cross yesterday, bound for a New Jersey terminal—the first leg of the journey to Britain.

Brl. Gen. F. R. Keeler (retired), chairman of the local chapter, announced the shipment included 1,000 specially-made bandages, 12,000 surgical dressings, 265 baby layettes and 1,800 new and knitted garments for adults and children.

The letter was postmarked San Francisco, Calif., and it was addressed to:

Miss Jeanne Turner, (The 11-year-old girl who gave her hair to the Weather Bureau, Washington, D. C.)

The postoffice sent it to the Weather Bureau. The Weather Bureau sent it to the Washington Institute of Technology, and there it was forwarded to Jeanne at her home, 4228 Seventh Street Northwest.

No top-night novelist could have told the story more effectively than did the young writer of the letter who had read about Jeanne's sacrifice of her 32-inch golden tresses to Uncle Sam in news service stories picked up from The Washington Post and published throughout the country.

Letter to Little Patriot

This is the letter: "Dear Little Patriot:

"When we saw your picture in the paper, it occurred to us to follow your example, as almost all of us had long hair. So we had a special meeting at my house, and my uncle, who is a barber, came also.

Hunsaker Named As Coordinator Of Navy Research

Secretary of the Navy Knox yesterday announced the appointment of Dr. Jerome C. Hunsaker, noted scientist of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, as coordinator of research and development for the Navy Department.

He will serve as chairman of the newly established Naval Research and Development Board, which will be composed also of one representative each of the Chief of Naval Operations, the Bureau of Ships, Bureau of Ordnance, Bureau of Aeronautics and Bureau of Yards and Docks.

30 Employees Hold Stoppage In Laundry

"I thought I would die when the shears made their first cut on my forehead, but then I looked at my picture and the flag and I was all right again. One girl did start to weaken when he came her turn to sit before the mirror with her hair combed out to be cut, but those whose hair already lay on the table held her and uncle gave her a specially short-cut as a result."

"The four 'c' girls all have long bobs and as soon as their hair is long enough to be of use they will be trimmed short, too."

"One of our girls has won several beauty contests, and we were going to let her off, but her brother is a soldier (draft) and she insisted on having her long hair shorn as close as the rest of us. Her hair was 36 inches long and ever so thick. She wore it in a huge knot."

"We all feel very much in debt to you for showing us the way to serve our country, and though our heads feel light (no doubt yours does) our hearts are light too, in a different sense."

Example for Hundreds

"Here's hoping that your example may inspire hundreds of others to undergo shearing off of their hair until our Nation has all that is needed."

"Truly your friend, 'HILDA LARSON.'"

"Secretary, Scandia Circle."

Officials of the Institute said last night they would be "delighted" to receive the contributions from the girls in San Francisco, particularly since they were of Scandinavian descent and "Scandinavian blonde hair is the best in the world for our purposes."

The Institute has received many offers of hair since its need was published. It was said, but most volunteers have been refused because their hair was not of the necessary quality.

Recreation Hearing Set Tomorrow

McCarran Appoints Subcommittee on Playground Plans For the District

Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the District Committee, yesterday named a special subcommittee to consider the District Recreation Board bill and announced that hearings on the measure would start at 10 a. m. tomorrow.

McCarran, intensely interested in the bill, named himself chairman of the subcommittee and appointed as its other members Senators Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, and Capper (Republican), of Kansas.

The bill would create a seven-member board, with four of its members to be citizens, to have charge of recreation activities here.

Measures Reported Out

Appointment of the subcommittee which also will consider later a bill to create an industrial accident-prevention board here, came yesterday at the close of a District Committee meeting that voted favorable reports on seven minor District measures.

McCarran also announced that the subcommittee would be appointed to consider two Board of Public Welfare bills. Bills approved by the committee would:

Establish general rules for the issuance of Congressional license tags under supervision of the clerk of the House and the secretary of the Senate and affecting about 30 persons.

Admit foreign service employees to treatment at St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Permit Stewart Brothers to construct pipelines in the vicinity of Fourteenth and M Streets Southwest.

Authorize St. Elizabeths Hospital to accept gifts considered by the hospital to be in the public interest.

Thompkins Disputes Keech

After an exchange between Dr. William J. Thompson, recorder of deeds, and Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech over whether the Commissioner had given the measure an unfavorable report, the committee put over until Monday action on a bill to authorize an additional $50,000 for construction of the new recorder of deeds building.

Several members of the committee expressed the opinion that the measure should be considered by the Appropriations Committee.

Ernest Henry, representing the Potomac Citizens Association and the Federation of Citizens Associations, opposed the measure. He said the bill to remove voting requirements in the present law covering appointments to the Public Utilities Commission. The law requires an appointee to have been a resident of the District for three years and to have voted in none of the States in that period.

"Persons claim to be residents of the Capital for some purposes, but disclaim their residence here when it comes to paying taxes," Henry stated. "A man who has not qualified as a resident by paying taxes is not a citizen as far as we are concerned and we don't want him to vote."

Pointing out that by maintaining a voting residence outside the District persons have been able to escape tax payment, Henry declared that the bill would be a "tax" on the residents of the District.

"I don't think it is fair to require a man who has not qualified as a resident by paying taxes to be a citizen as far as we are concerned and we don't want him to vote."

When the Navy Band turned from light Spanish rumbas into an American "la-ra-boom-de-ay" march, called the "Boy Scouts," the audience doubled its applause.

The program closed with "The Star-Spangled Banner." Then the lights went on, and the Pan-American hall was filled with people.

Conversation by the speakers in Spanish and English filled the air, and the second summer concert was over.

Hey! Have You Seen Chum? Pals in Navy Miss Their Mascot

Dear Chum: Please come back to duty. All is forgiven. No K. P. no deck swabbing, even the A. W. O. L. will be crossed off your record. But please come back. Your pals miss you. (Signed) Navy Research Laboratory Staff, Anacostia.

That was the urgent message telephoned to The Washington Post for publication yesterday by the group at Naval Research Laboratory.

Two days ago, Chum, a black-and-white Boston bull terrier, and considered by the staff as the finest mascot in the world, decided to go A. W. O. L. It happened on Highway 130, just this side of Bordentown, N. J. He had been with Lieut. Joel Parks, U. S. N., supply officer, Naval Research Laboratory, and Mrs. Parks, on a ten-day trip to New York and Rhode Island. He did not seem restless during the trip; in fact, he appeared to have the time of his life and slept comfortably in Mrs. Parks' suitcase every night. But Monday, along about noon, Mrs. Parks decided to "spell" the lieutenant a little with the driving, so they stopped for a moment to change over. A few minutes later Chum was missing.

Navy Band Plays Pan American Concert

RAPT LISTENERS—On the outside steps of the Pan-American Union Building, Marie Beck, Estelle Dennis and Marian the Carabier listen to the Navy Band.

2,000 Attend Pan American Union Concert

Western hemispheric unity was never greater than last night when the strains of South and North American music drifted through the air over the Pan American Union's beautiful terrace garden.

Seated under the three huge white arches of the building's annex was the United States Navy Band, conducted by Lieut. Charles Benter. Two thousand people sat outdoors in darkness listening to the high, then low, the loud, then soft, and the somber, then light notes of the band. They watched the grotesque shadows of the leader's baton as it danced across the white building.

Juan Arvizu, Mexican tenor, accompanied by the guitar-playing Flores Brothers, entertained the audience with medleys of South American music. On either side of them hung the flags of the 21 American republics, and above them, carved in white and gold cameo-shaped frame, was a map of the Western Hemisphere. Attendance was the largest the Pan American Union has ever had in its 104 concerts since 1924.

In the audience sat Washington's elite. Present were Vice President Henry A. Wallace, Russian Ambassador Oumansky, United States Surgeon General Thomas Parran, the South and Central American ambassadors and ministers, and other high governmental and diplomatic officials.

When the Navy Band turned from light Spanish rumbas into an American "la-ra-boom-de-ay" march, called the "Boy Scouts," the audience doubled its applause.

Starlight Makes Ideal Setting For Perole Quartet Concert

By Ray C. B. Brown.

C. C. Cappel and the National Capital Parks Service present the Perole String Quartet (Joseph Coleman, George Ockner, Lillian Fuchs and Ernest Silberstein) on Tuesday night in Meridian Hill Park. Program: Quartet in C minor, Op. 18, No. 4 (Beethoven), Italianisches Serenade in G major (Wolf), Quartet in F major, Op. 96 (Dvorak).

Thus far the "Starlight" chamber music concerts in Meridian Hill Park have uninterrupted enjoyed the favor of those minor tutelary divinities who in mythology presided over gardens and the weather. Last evening's concert, the fifth of the series, took place under ideal conditions as one could desire, and the attendance again demonstrated that the undertaking is no longer in the experimental stage.

What the effect of this success may be is unpredictable, but the example set in Washington may well be followed by other cities to the great benefit of chamber music in the United States.

One element in the pleasurable progress of the program was the presence of the Perole String Quartet players, who have for many years come to us by way of radio as inviolable and disembodied performers. The local debut of the organization produced the happy impression of meeting at last persons whose acquaintance one has long wanted to make. In that meeting there was no disappointment, for the technical and artistic equipment of the ensemble satisfied the aesthetic sense.

While the program offered nothing new, it had a good balance in the symmetry of contrasts. It began with Beethoven's C minor quartet from Opus 18 which by the mature workmanship supports Thayer's supposition that the composer wrote it as the last of the set of six. Our familiarity with the work prevents us from appreciating the shock which Beethoven produced upon his contemporaries by such shattering of traditions as substituting a scherzo for the slow movement. Today it seems to us that this scherzo and the following minuet relieve the impassioned tension of the first and last movements.

The "Italian Serenade" by that short-lived genius, Hugo Wolf, is always welcome because it is one of the few instrumental pieces to come from his lyrical pen. The Peroles played it as it should be played—with a joyous zest that made its measures glow with warmth.

The concluding work, Dvorak's F major quartet, justifies the usually reprehensible practice of tacking nicknames on to music left useless by the author. It is "American" not only because it was written at Spillville, Iowa, and because it contains some themes recognizably native, but also because it has been adopted by us as something of our own. In these respects it shares the good fortune of the E minor symphony and the seventh of the ten "Humoresques" which were also composed on our soil. For all that, the quartet looked emotionally toward Bohemia, and the second movement is filled with homesickness and longing.

Washington's defense, highway improvement program is in preliminary planning stages and will be "ready to go" when Congress authorizes funds, Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, said last night.

Whitehurst declined to discuss the various contemplated projects, explaining the bill providing an estimated $487,500 for local use has yet to pass the Senate and will then need "considerable interpretation."

"The bill is very broad," Whitehurst said, and I would rather not discuss our plans until it is passed and has been studied carefully."

The money earmarked for District use is part of a 287 million dollar defense roads measure for the entire country.

London, July 22 (U.P.).—George Bernard Shaw, 44, a street peddler, was fined 20 shillings in police court today for driving a horse and van while drunk. When George Bernard Shaw, the playwright, was informed of the incident, he said: "I think it is a most unfair thing to take a child and stick a label on it by giving it a name it can't possibly live up to in later years."

TRUTH CAN BE LIBELOUS

One reason the Yankees are making a runaway of the American League pennant race is because they own the all-fired best .276 hitter in baseball. Ordinarily that figure is calculated to produce only a snicker among pitchers, but in the case of Charley Keller it is an awesome thing.

Keller's .276 average is dynamite. It's loaded with grief for the league's pitchers. Apparently the fellow doesn't waste his hits. He is unloading them when they hurt, else he wouldn't be pressing Joe DiMaggio for the league lead in driving in runs. DiMaggio is outitting Keller by nearly 100 points, but with all his amazing hit-production he has driven in only four more runs than Keller who, unlike DiMaggio, hasn't played in all the Yankees' games.

In a year when he is in a batting slump, Keller is more than slightly terrific. What his run-production for the Yankees this year would be were he hitting at a .300 pace is intriguing. Certainly a new record for runs batted in would be set by Keller. With runners on base the guy is poison to pitchers, for several reasons.

Keller hits singles, but he doesn't trifle too much with 'em. His .276 average notwithstanding, he's leading the league with 22 home runs. Twice this season he has knocked the ball out of the park with the bases full. A Keller hit is a thing of authority. Detracting nothing from Joe DiMaggio, Keller is not exactly a drawback to DiMaggio's average.

He's a Help to DiMaggio

Usually following DiMaggio in the Yankee batting order, Keller must look like something of an apparition to opposing pitchers. That they impose a strain on pitchers is admitted. The man who pitches to DiMaggio can scarcely be relaxed with Keller lingering in the offing with his run-laden bat.

Keller is the favorite hitter of at least one American umpire. Bill McGowan describes him as "the most vicious hitter in the league and I don't care what his average is." Discussing Keller recently, McGowan declared, "There's a fellow who actually scares pitchers out of base hits. He stands up there like he's going to murder the ball. His face is doing everything but growling at the pitcher. Those hairy arms would scare little children. Keller's just a brute at bat."

Paradoxically, Keller is having his finest season in a year when his batting average is far off. His .276 is ill-becoming Keller, who led the International League in hitting before he went up to the Yankees and, in his maiden year in the majors hit in the .350's. He slumped below .300 last season, but he was ill.

The amazing thing about Keller is that he isn't hitting .300. His is a stylish batting stroke, and he hits to all fields. He is one of the fast men in the league and he should get more than his share of infield hits. The assumption is, of course, that Keller is swinging for distance this season. He is going for the long ball, as the extra-base hit figures attest.

A Good Investment

When he came up to the majors in 1939, Keller was battling Ted Williams for rookie-of-the-year honors. There was little to choose between their hitting, and Keller was the superior outfielder. He owns a better throwing arm than Williams, gets over the ground with superior skill and has more dash on the bases. But Williams' hitting has been more enduring. The Red Sox outfielder has been able to combine power with a fancy average, an item at which Keller has failed.

Keller's career is a compliment, of course, to the Yankees' far-flung scouting system. Paul Kritchell, of the Yankees' scouting staff, turned in such a glowing report on Keller while watching him play at the University of Maryland that the Yanks' front office agreed to pay off a $12,000 mortgage on his dad's farm in exchange for his name on a Yankee contract. They never made a better investment.

There isn't a manager in the league who wouldn't swap certain players hitting .330 or more for Keller and his .276 average; that is, unless they change the game's rules which, for the past 102 years have been paying off on runs slugged across the plate. Keller gets those runs home better than any man in the league except DiMaggio and when you call Keller a .276 hitter it is at once the truth and a horrible libel.

Tappett Takes Midget Race Before 9,432 Fans

West Lanham Automobile Feature Won Easily by New York Driver

Hundreds of late comers were turned away from the track as an overflow, record crowd numbering hundreds of thousands saw Tappett win the race in easy fashion after taking the lead at the twenty-seventh of the 40 laps.

Brownell's Fine 136 Wins Open

BOBBY BROWNELL

D. C. Star Captures Maryland Title With Sensational Rounds; Andy Gibson Second

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Post Staff Writer

Baltimore, July 22.—Bobby Brownell, a 22-year-old amateur golfer with a million dollar golf game and a heart to match, made history here today at Elkridge by winning the Maryland Open championship after a stretch battle with Andy Gibson which will never be forgotten by several hundred galleries.

The thin, blond youngster, a June graduate of Duke University, whose ambition is an FBI appointment, knocked par figures for a loop with rounds of 69 and 67 for a 136 total which smashed the 21-year-old tournament record by three shots. Brownell was the first amateur to win since Fred Savage turned the trick in 1924, and his 136 total, 6 under par, broke Al Houghton's 139 record set over Brownell's home Manor course several years ago.

Won Title the Hard Way

Brownell won the hard way. The new champion and Andy Gibson, who won at Congressional in 1938, played side by side over the 36-hole course and staged an individual battle for the championship which left every other player in the record field of 83 a forgotten man.

Gibson finished second by two shots with rounds of 70 and 68 for a 138 total, four under par, but not good enough. Andy lost the two precious shots which cost him the title on the thirty-fourth hole, where he went over par, and Bobby played a beautiful seven-iron shot within inches of the pin for a spectacular birdie three.

Brownell's card speaks for itself. For the first 34 holes he did not have a five and on the last two, where he took fives, they were good for pars. His afternoon 67 equaled his own course record set in the Baltimore Open here last week, in which he tied for third and was low amateur with 75, 67-142.

Gibson Takes Top Money

For the day, Gibson and Brownell had a best ball of 16 under par for the 36 holes, or an average of a birdie on nearly every other hole between them.

Gibson's second-place finish was good for first prize money of $120. Brownell won the $25 merchandise award for low amateur, another $15 golf shop award for the best round in the day and in addition he will receive a gold medal as the Maryland Open champion.

But Coffey, the Hagerstown professional and National Open and National P. G. A. qualifier with 141 totals, was 141 again here today, from rounds of 71 and 70, for second prize money of $80 and third place in the tournament. Coffey's round included a four-putt green on the eleventh hole. Coffey was also second last year at Columbia.

Giants Purchase Miller Slugger

St. Louis, July 22 (AP).—The New York Giants announced today purchase of Herbert (Babe) Barna, leading batter in the American Association, from the Minneapolis Millers. Barna will not report to the Giants until the association race is over, for the Millers now are in first place.

The big right fielder, who stands 6-foot-2 and weighs 220, has a .338 average for 76 games with Minneapolis. He bats left handed and throws right handed. He has driven in 62 runs, has hit 11 home runs, and is exceptionally fast for his size, having stolen 17 bases.

He had a tryout with the Philadelphia Athletics in 1938.

Nats Beat Tigers, 5-4

Drives in 4 Runs; Hudson Outpitches Trout, Aided by Four Double Plays

By Shirley Povich

Post Staff Writer

The Nats clanked their favorite ball team, the Tigers, yesterday, and licked 'em again. For the ninth time in 13 games this season, the Nats beat the Tigers. It was a squeaky sort of victory, 5 to 4, and at the finish Sid Hudson was wavering as if black-jacked, but he walked off the field the winner.

Hudson was the winner chiefly because Mickey Vernon was slugging Washington runs across the plate on almost his every batting appearance and because, also, the Nats' infielders were coming up with double-play balls throughout the afternoon. Four times they choked off Tiger uprisings with double plays.

It was on a double-play ball, in fact, that the game ended. The Tigers had the tying run on base with one out in the ninth when Cecil Travis, with the utmost casualness, took a grounder off Frank Higgins' bat while standing on second base and fired the ball to first for the two concluding outs.

Hudson Invites Trouble

An inning before, Hudson was inviting himself to the showers and Alce Carrasquel was warming up furiously in the bull pen when Jimmy Bloodworth helped Hudson over the hump. With York on base and one out, Bloodworth nosedived after a scorching grounder off Meyer's bat, smothered it behind second base and dug the ball out of his blouse in time to flip it to Travis for a force play.

It was an eight-hit game that Hudson pitched and only once did he allow anything more than a single. He definitely outpitched Paul (Dixie) Trout, the Detroit right-hander who, a week ago, had held the road-weary Nats to four hits at Briggs Stadium. Trout yesterday gave up four hits in the first two innings and was excused at the end of the sixth.

Vernon Is Hero

Mickey Vernon was yesterday's hero. He slugged home runs and the Nats five runs with his little bat. He boomed a single into center field that fetched two runners home in the first inning. He played a third-inning single to center that produced another run. And in the seventh, he singled to right and the Nats had one more. Vernon did very, very well for himself and the Nats.

The Nats came up with one very important gift race yesterday, the contribution of Center Fielder Tuck Stainbach in the third inning. Stainbach attempted the old, impossible stunt of throwing a fly ball to third before he caught it and the result was a grievous muff that led to a Washington score.

The Washington's pounded Trout and Archie McKain, his successor, for 11 hits. They collected three of 'em in the first inning and wiped out a 1-0 Tiger lead. Cramer and

Two Jockeys Injured In a Four-Horse Spill

Gray and Gilbert Sent to Hospital After Mishap Entering Stretch in Fourth Race at Empire

Empire City Race Track, Yonkers, N. Y., July 22.—Four jockeys and their mounts figured in the most spectacular spill of the year as the field in the fourth race neared the head of the stretch here this afternoon. Reports from the track first-aid quarters said that Allen Gray, who went down from Schuylerville, received cuts over his right eye, and that he was being sent to St. John's Hospital, Yonkers, to have both shoulders X-rayed. Schuylerville appeared to be the first to fall, and in the utter confusion, three others could not escape the jam. Gray did not move for several minutes and was removed in the track ambulance.

Welsh Wins With Ease in W. Va. Open

By the Associated Press
White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., July 22.—Barney Welsh, of Rockville, Md., opened his campaign for his fifth West Virginia Open tennis crown today by trouncing the veteran Fred Valentine, Jr. of Richmond, Va., 6-0, 6-1.

Ed Loeschlager, of Cleveland, Ohio, provided a major upset in eliminating the veteran Byron Wilkinson, of Huntington, 6-2, 7-5.

Joe Scherr, of Cincinnati, took two hours to defeat Bill Feuchtenberger, of Bluefield, 6-3, 6-4, and Edward DeLeon, Cleveland, trounced Byrne Bauer, of White Sulphur Springs, 6-2, 6-2.

In the women's division, Anna Sloan, of Richmond, turned back Helen Jennings, of Sewickley, Pa., 6-1, 6-4. Helen Rentschler, Hartford, Conn., upset little Joan Holway, of Wheeling, 6-0, 7-5.

Charlotte Joins Dixie Grid League

Richmond, Va., July 22 (AP).—The Dixie Professional Football League became a six-club circuit tonight by the addition of the Charlotte, N. C., club, which has been awarded a franchise. Paul McWhorter, league secretary, announced.

Other members are Richmond, Newport News, Norfolk, Roanoke and Portsmouth.

Efforts to get Petersburg into the loop have failed, the league official said.

The Charlotte club will be headed by Floyd M. Simmons, former Davidson and University of North Carolina coach.

The recent lifting of the "blue law" Sunday ban on sports in Charlotte cleared the way for a professional team there. The American Legion Stadium, seating 15,000, is available for Sunday games.

Bettina Wins Decision Over 'Red' Burman

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, July 22.—The southpaw style of Melio Bettina was too puzzling for Red Burman to solve tonight and the former light-heavyweight champion punched out a ten-round decision over the Baltimore redhead before a crowd of 10,167 in Ebbets Field. Bettina weighed 166 1/2; Burman, 169 1/2.

In this home ball park of the Brooklyn Dodgers, where just about everything happens, just about everything did in this tough tussle.

There was one moment, in the fourth round, when both fighters fell out of the ring. There was another, in the eighth, when Burman, unable to do anything using the determined little Italian from Beacon, N. Y., who quit the light-heavyweight ranks nearly a year ago to campaign among the big boys.

Burman Twice Staggered

And finally, you had the somewhat startling picture of Burman whose chin Louis couldn't dent with his Sunday shots, twice being staggered by Bettina's left hand pokes, which hitherto never had been regarded as needing a sign warning the unwary of high explosive content.

All in all, however, it was an important, and upset triumph for the determined little Italian from Beacon, N. Y., who quit the light-heavyweight ranks nearly a year ago to campaign among the big boys.

Wakefield, Tigers' $50,000 Star, Gets Action Tonight

Winston-Salem, N. C., July 22 (AP). Dick Wakefield, the Detroit Tigers' $45,000 rookie outfielder who was assigned to the Winston-Salem Twins yesterday, will break into the line-up against the Durham Bulls in the final Piedmont League game of a three-game series tomorrow night.

J. "To Atz, Twins manager, said he would station the former Michigan athlete in right field. Atz said he had been informed by Del Baker, of the Tigers, that Wakefield's hitting was all right, but his fielding was not of major league caliber. Detroit officials believe he will develop into a good fielder before the season ends.

New York Increases Lead to Eight Games With Early Attack, Predicated on Walks

By Judson Bailey

Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, July 22.—The rampant New York Yankees overpowered Bob Feller today and edged out the Cleveland Indians, 4 to 3, to virtually destroy the last obstruction between them and another American League pennant.

With a crowd of 45,227 displaying mixed feelings at the progress of the struggle, the great young right-hander made a noble effort to stem the tide that already had engulfed all other rivals. But he was man-handled in the early innings, and instead of gaining his twentieth victory, suffered his fifth defeat of the season.

It was New York's thirty-fifth triumph in their last 41 games and the tenth in 14 tussles with the Tribe this year. As a result the Yanks increased their first-place margin to an apparently impregnable eight games.

Feller Shows Strain

Feller labored as though he realized the hopes of the entire league for halting the parade of the Yankees rested on his shoulders. He pitched slowly, methodically, several times pausing in the midst of his complicated windup to wipe the sweat from his brow.

He had stepped into the breach last week at Cleveland to win the final game of the series with the Yanks and save the Indians from a complete rout. But today he yielded to the strain of carrying too big a load. His fast ball did not look as fast, and his curves frequently did not break.

He walked two men in succession in the first inning, the second on four straight balls. In the second Joe Gordon smashed a terrific home run, his sixteenth of the year, into the third tier of Yankee Stadium's left field stands. It was one of the hardest drives "The Flash" ever hit.

Keller Doubles

Reds Down Brooklyn by 5-Run Rally

The Associated Press
Cincinnati, July 22.—The collapsing Brooklyn Dodgers dropped their fifth game in six starts today and lost their exclusive hold on the Cincinnati League lead as the Cincinnati Reds rallied for five runs in the ninth inning and won, 5-4.

Luke Hamlin had a shutout without his grasp going into the final frame, only to have Lonnie Frey open with a double. Then Frank McCormick singled for one run and Bill Werber walked.

Hamlin made two more wide pitches to Dick West and then was waved off the mound in favor of Hugh Casey, who completed the job of walking West and filling the bases.

Pink Hit Scores Run

Chuck Aleno came up as a pinch-hitter for Harry Craft and appeared to put the Sox back on the starting line to swing at a pitch. But he hit the ball and it sailed along three rightfield foul line, scoring three runs and tying the score.

Aleno's partner, Bill Walters, who had held the Dodgers to eight hits, came to the plate and drove a fly to centerfield to score Lloyd Waner, who ran for Aleno, to gain his twelfth victory of the season.

The Dodgers had loaded the bases in the second on singles by Hamilton and Pee-wee Reese and a walk to Billy Herman.

Pete Reiser singled with the bases full and two to Brooklyn run in the third and added two more for an apparently secure margin in the eighth when Eddie Joost fumbled a grounder by Pee-wee Reese and Dick Cossy's throw to Cookie Lavagotto followed with doubles.

-With CONSIDINE

New York, July 22.—Robbing the waste basket: •

"Sir," sternly writes "a colored sports fan," from Los Angeles, "you mention something about Louis sighting Conn down his double-barrel shotgun nose, probably because he beat a man of your race. That shows your disappointment. Are you perfect? Take a good look at yourself in the mirror. Are you all man? No. None of your kind are. You are broadminded only where you can come out on top."

Nertz, Mister. I picked Louis to win, and have always said he's the finest sportsman on the American sports scene. I'll probably continue to use that nose-gunnery parallel until the little woman takes me firmly by the arm some day and says, "Don't you think 19 times is enough to use something like that?"

CONSINE

CONSIDINE some day and says, "Don't you think 19 times is enough to use something like that?"

"Dear Considine," typewrites Pvt. Don Baselle from Fort Bragg, N. C., "You got a pip of a bum steer on Silvio Coucci when you wrote that the Army brass hats had decided that he was too small for the cavalry, even though he had been a champion jockey. I was inducted the same day Silvio was and I can clarify the situation for you.

"We're presumably serving our year with the 112th Field Artillery, a horsedrawn unit, in Fort Bragg. Coucci never made application to be transferred to the cavalry. Immediately following our induction we spent the last seven days of April at Fort Dix's recruit reception center.

When we arrived here our superiors gave Coucci two horses. Since practically the first day of our arrival Silvio has been a 'lead driver.' He leads a team of six horses that draw a 77-mm. cannon.

"To complete the tale, let me say that Pvt. Silvio Coucci is enjoying the best of health, and we all agree that 'couc' is one of the finest and most beloved figures down here."

Sorry, Pvt. Coucci. Your six horses make me six times wronger than par for the misinformation course. The story came from a pal of yours, to whom you're apparently not writing these days.

"From time to time sports writers have publicly and sharply criticized the activities of the New York State Athletic Commission," writes State Senator Thomas C. Desmond, chairman of the committee on affairs of cities. "Although primarily interested in social welfare legislation, I have long wondered whether there is a real need for a reorganization of the boxing commission, a change in its personnel or in its jurisdiction."

"Therefore, I am asking now if in your opinion the administration of the athletic commissions has been on the whole satisfactory. Does it require a legislative investigation?"

My humble advice, Senator, is to stick to your social welfare. The boxing commission can occasionally be very funny, and it seems to me that it might rotate its referees for big fights a little more than it does at present, but that is not the business of the commission. It is honest, it is efficient, it is not corrupt, it is not biased, it is not venal, which is the important thing, and about as free of bias and politics as a politically appointed board of any nature can become.

There must be many more important things to investigate in New York than our boxing commission. We think it has done a lot to keep down the eternal rascality in boxing. There have been fewer prearranged fights in New York during the regime of Gen. Phelan, Col. Weir and Pvt. Bill Brown than there were under any other set of commissioners.

They need a pat on the back, and perhaps a Funk & Wagnalls. But not an investigation.

"You want to know who put in the complaint that will run gambling out of Saratoga this racing season?" writes an irate Saratoga merchant. "He is _____ (name on request. He's a crackpot with a phony title who had a run-in with the city council and has been going to every meeting of the council and putting the blast on the fathers. Every year we lose gambling because some old punk who wouldn't work if you handed him a job writes to the Governor. To make matters worse, he never hears a complaint from a churchgoer. Just from riff-raff. If we have a poor August under him it is plain he is trying to keep our heads above water during the rest of the year. All we want is a little action. Live and let live. That's what we want."

Club Griffith, popular Washington night spot which has been dark for a month, stages another of its shows this evening—with the Nats playing the Tigers under the lights, beginning at 8:30 o'clock.

For the Nats' game against his favorite opposition—the Nats have beaten the Tigers 9 times in 14 attempts this season—Manager Bucky Harris has reserved his knuckle ball pitcher, Dutch Leonard. Originally scheduled to pitch yesterday, Leonard was withheld by Harris on the grounds that his butterfly ball would be more baffling to the Tigers under the lights.

As his opponent, Leonard will have Bashful Buck Newsum, so-called because he's bashful toward time bombs. Newsum, who is having one of his finest in-and-out seasons after winning 24 games last year, has no home runs.

All seats for tonight's games are reserved but tickets were plentiful last night, at no increase in prices. Tickets will go on sale today, at the Stadium office at 9 a. m.

Leonard has been the most consistent of the Washington pitchers in recent weeks. In his last start, he pitched a no-hit game in an easy victory over the Tigers, allowing only seven hits.

The Western Division All-Stars outsluged the Eastern Division All-Stars to win a 13-5 game in the Washington Boys Club All-Star Peeewe division clash yesterday.

Two Western pitchers, Granger and O'Neill, held the Eastern All-Stars to six hits while the winners were pummeling three Eastern Errors Help St. Louis to Tie for League Lead; Giants' Rally, Sparked by Homers, Falls Short

St. Louis, July 22—A triumphant six-run rally in the fourth inning brought the St. Louis Cardinals a 7-to-6 victory over the New York Giants today and a tie for the lead in the National League.

Two errors figured in the Red Birds' raid, but they made seven authoritative hits, starting with Enos Slaughter's ninth home run which opened the inning. Jimmy Brown, who had been hitless in his first two games, doubled and scored on a single by Mancuso with one out. Pitcher Ernie White singled and caused Bill McCool, a former Cardinal, to be called to the aid of Bob Carpenter, the Giants' starting hurler. Then Frank Crespi singled to load the Mascus apparently was trapped off third, but got back safely. Then White was trapped off second and had to slide back on a bad throw by Catcher Hank Danning. Estel Crabtree singled for two runs and continued to second when Billy Jurgens was there to throw. Finally Johnny Hoop tripped off the right field wall for two more runs.

The Giants battled back, and succeeded in batting White out of the box in the sixth, but their 11-hit attack, which included a pair of home runs by Jurgens and Babe Young, fell short.

In cooperation with the National Defense program, aluminum pots and pans will be accepted as partial payment for admission to the Merchants Softball League doubleheader at Ballston Stadium tonight. It has been announced by stadium softball director, Mike Sklar.

Sklar stated last night that adults bringing either an aluminum pot or pan will be charged only 15 cents for admission, while the fee for children will be 10 cents.

Evans said Bill Rieth of Lorain, Ohio, who played guard for Carnegie Tech for three seasons, also had signed to play with the Rams this year. Rieth, who weighs 210 pounds, was graduated from Carnegie in 1940 but did not play football last year.

Anderson captained the Stanford University team in 1939.

Chicubs Shell Brave Hurlers. And Win, 13-2

Chicago, July 22.—The Chicago Cubs today celebrated their return to Wrigley Field with a 16-hit, 13-to-2 slaughter of the Boston Braves today.

The Cubs took a two-run margin in the second inning and boosted this edge to six runs before the Braves could get a hit in the first.

Big Bill Nicholson, the veteran right-hander, yielded Boston's only runs in the sixth and the Cubs retained with seven runs in their next two innings.

Bill Nicholson drove in three runs and scored three on a double and his eighteenth homer of the season in the fifth inning.

Left fielder Dominic DeLeasandro was the other hitting star, driving home four runs on a double and a triple.

The start of the game was delayed almost an hour by a heavy rain.

Reorganizing Of Big Board Is Due Today

New York, July 22.—Action on final steps in the administrative reorganization of the New York Stock Exchange was expected to be taken at tomorrow's meeting of the institution's board of governors. It was reported in exchange circles today.

The proposed plan, which has been under consideration by a special committee, would call for a reduction in the size of the board of governors, abolition of the standing committee system, the granting of wider powers of administration to the salaried staff and a rewriting of the constitution in simplified form. There are 32 governors.

Coincidental with the predictions of early action on the program, the exchange received notice that Paul V. Shields, head of the large Wall Street firm that bears his name and a leader in the exchange reform movement since its inception in 1936, would resign from the board of governors and other executive posts.

Shields, who served without salary, was said to feel his active association with the exchange management could be terminated in view of the well-advanced stage of the reorganization. It was also reported he might be called to Washington to fill a special post in the Government service.

Shields was a member of the committee which arranged for the selection of Emil Schram as president of the exchange. Schram, former chairman of the RFC, joined the exchange management on July 1.

Macks Bunch Hits to Beat Browns, 4 to 1

Philadelphia, July 22.—Exploding five hits for all of their runs in the second inning, the Philadelphia Athletics opened their home stand today with a 4-to-1 victory over the St. Louis Browns.

Dick Seibert's triple off the right-field wall was the big blow of the Athletics' uprising against Bob Harris. Bob Johnson opened the inning with a single and scored on Seibert's three-base blow. Sam Chapman's single sent Seibert across the plate. Frank Hayes forced Chapman, but Pete Suder's single sent Hayes to third and Pitcher Jack Knott singled over the infield to score both runners.

Knott, winning his eighth game of the season, held the Browns well in check, their lone run coming in the sixth when Cliff Walker, advanced to third on Walt Johnson's single after George McQuinn had flied out, and scoring on Roy Culbreth's infield out.

Ace Bowlers Perform for USO Fund

The hat is passed as star bowlers of the city staged special matches for the United Service Organization fund last night at the Queen Pin Alleys. A total of $25 was raised for the fund. Left to right—Walter Megaw, Queen Pin; Frank Mischo, G. P. O. League; Frank Guehlner, Men's District League; and Milton Walker, G. P. O. Megaw and Guehlner won a special doubles match from Walker and Mischo with a 2,540 total for ten games, gaining a 98-pin margin.

Nats Defeat Tigers, 5 to 4; Hudson Victor

Lewis slugged singles with one out and then the Tigers went strategic, purposely passing Travis with first base open. The idea was to bring Vernon to bat, and it wasn't so hot. Vernon whipped the next pitch into center for a single and the Nats had a 2-1 lead.

They boosted that margin to 4-1 in the third after Trout walked Lewis on four pitches. Travis singled to left and the pesky Vernon slapped a single to center that got Lewis home from second. Travis was out trying to take third on the hit, but Vernon moved down to second. Then it was that Archie flied to Stainback who camped under the ball and dropped it. Vernon moved to third on the muffed and Early got him home with a long fly to Stainback.

Travis set in motion what proved to be the winning run when he fired a two-bagger into right field with one out in the seventh. It didn't take Vernon long. This time it was a single to right and Travis was home with the Nats' fifth run.

Back in the first inning Hudson gave up a run to the Tigers, but it wasn't strictly his fault. Bloodsucker muffed a grounder off McCosky's bat and eventually Vero batted the run home with a single to right.

Hudson pitched four innings of scoreless two-hit ball thereafter, led by two double plays, and then in the sixth he invited trouble for himself. After York led off with a single, Campbell drew a walk, and with none out, Meyer tapped a double-play grounder to Hudson, who bobbled the ball and busedy got the runner at first. Then he batted a single to left and two Tiger runs were made, cutting the Nats' lead to 4-3. Eventually Hudson got out of the inning by starting a double play on Conner's tap.

Bloodsucker's fielding averted trouble for Hudson in the eighth, but Hudson had to dispose of Pinch Hitter Charley Gehring with the tying two runs on base. Gehring flied out to Crumer. In the ninth, with one out, Stainback doubled to center and McCosky scored him with a single to center, putting the tying run on base. Travis took charge of the hitting double-play grounder at that point and the Nats won a ball game.

Yankees Defeat Feller; Near Flag

between second and third. When the ball dropped safe, Henrich scored and DiMaggio held third, coming home later on Gordie's fly. Another walk to Johnny Sturm opened the fourth and he came around on a sacrifice and a double by DiMaggio.

After that Feller tightened up to allow only one other hit for a total of seven, but it was too late. He struck out four men.

Donald held the Tribe to six hits in getting his fifth victory of the season and third over Cleveland. In the fourth he hit Jeff Heath with a pitch, Clarence Campbell doubled and Oscar Grimes scored with a single. Then in the eighth, Campbell smacked his second homer of the year for Cleveland's other run.

It will be a permanent job for Mr. Woodcock for at least as long as the series lasts, which will be the entire summer, and you can be prepared to hear some unusual stories some of which will point out the extreme logic of buying Defense Savings Bonds and Stamps.

Abbott and Costello, the comedians, are to be guests on the night show in a specially written comedy skit and Raymond Massey is to appear in an original Arthur Miller playlet. The advance notices don't say whether it has anything to do with Abraham Lincoln.

If names make news, there are still more of them who will be guests on the program. These are Helen Hayes, the Metropolitan Opera; Albert Spalding, the internationally known violinist; Acton Oka Chase, and Song-writer Irving Berlin, who will present the lyrics of his songs, called "When the Crazy World is Saved." There'll be Harry Wood, of the "Hit Parade," along with Ray Block's Choir and Al Goodman's Orchestra are to appear in presenting the new song for the first time on the air.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH ONE LITTLE KISS? YOU SAID YOU CRAVED A LOT FOR ME...

STRANGE—I'VE LONGED FOR THIS MOMENT FOR YEARS—AND YET...ODDLY—I NO LONGER WANT YOU TO KISS ME!

(—HIS COARSE, CRUDE MANNER...IT ISN'T LIKE HIM—THAT'S IT—...I—) BELIEVE—REBEL—BECAUSE HE ME WITH LEFT HAND IMMEDIATELY HIS BEING THANDER LIKE SELF?

THAT'S ALL YOU REMEMBER ABOUT HIM THEN?

THAT HE HAD A TOOTH-ACHE, SO WHAT?

Contract Bridge

The defenders of today's hand were powerless to prevent declarer from entering dummy and cashing two good spades after he made a fine play on the first trick. East proved that it is not always wise to win a trick as cheaply as possible when he took the diamond lead with his ace, although dummy's five would have held.

South's three diamonds looked like his fourth best, so declarer applied the rule of eleven. He subtracted three from eleven and found there were eight diamonds higher than South's three in the other three hands. He had three of them; dummy had four more and North had just played the last one—the four spot—so that South must have the rest.

East needed an entry to dummy to cash the king, jack of spades after taking the king and queen, and the only possibility was the jack of diamonds. If, therefore, he let dummy's five hold, he would have only the nine left to play toward the jack. South would put up the queen, and declarer would be locked out from dummy. If, however, he used the ace on the first trick, he would have both the nine and the deuce to play up to the diamond jack, and South could not prevent him from getting in with the jack on one of them.

So declarer won the ace of diamonds and played the king, queen of spades so as not to block himself. He then led a small diamond toward dummy's jack, and when he got in with that card, ran the ace, jack of spades. He made his three no-trump contract, taking four spades, the ace, king, jack of diamonds and his two other aces.

Transocean Aided Nazi Plot, Jury Told

Berlin propagandists were so eager to tell Americans President Roosevelt fomented the war that they sent a complete book—the German White Paper—to this country by wireless.

"Send it to the newspapers" and "give copies to our friends" were the orders sent from Berlin with the paper to the New York offices of Transocean, the German news service now on trial in the District Court for not registering as a foreign propaganda agency. Federal agents seized messages in a raid on Transocean offices.

The White Paper testimony touched off an angry clash between Defense Attorney Emil Morosini, Jr., New York, and Special Assistant Attorney General George A. McNulty.

Morosini claimed the White Paper promotion was a private project of Dr. Manfred Zapp, Transocean manager for the United States. This promotion, said Morosini, ought not to be used against Transocean, because Zapp is not on trial. Indicted, he was released and fled to Germany.

As the ordinarily mild-mannered, scholarly McNulty began his reply Morosini said something that could not be heard outside the bar. But McNulty heard it and snapped, "Please omit your remarks, Mr. Morosini!" and continued in a thundering shout:

"The evidence shows that there was a conspiracy between the German government and Transocean News Service to foist this White Paper off on the American public. The White Paper purported to quote documents found in the Polish Foreign Ministry when the Germans captured Warsaw. These papers purported to show that President Roosevelt and his emissaries brought on the war. The Polish and American governments pronounced the papers spurious.

Before the jurors McNulty placed a series of messages exchanged between Transocean and Berlin, which revealed that not only was the book sent by wireless but that portions of it were repeated when static prevented clear transmission.

To Reveal Stratagems

Today the Government plans to show the stratagems by which the White Paper was circulated in this country. A witness will be Ralph Heaver Strassburger, Pa., publisher and former American diplomat. A special grand jury here charged that Zapp got Strassburger to pay for 60,000 copies of the White Paper which were given away, and which bore no trace of their official German origin.

Attorney Morosini, a member of the New York firm of Cohalan & Morosini, continued yesterday his stubborn fight to block the Government's evidence, objecting to each of the dozens of documents as they were presented.

"Let's not try the German system of government," Morosini urged, "let's try this case."

By Kurt G. Sell, Washington correspondent of D. N. B., the official German press service, McNulty showed that all German newspapermen must be "schrittleiters," that is, members of the Reichsverband der Deutsche Press.

Newsman Must Belong
"It is a compulsory organization," said Sell. "No one can earn a living as a newspaperman unless he belongs."

Placed in evidence was a record of Zapp's credentials as a "schrittleiter."

"Do you claim," Federal Judge T. Whitfield Davidson asked McNulty, "that in Germany a newspaperman must get a license, like a doctor or a lawyer in this country, and that a man cannot hold his license unless he is 'politically right'?"

"Yes, sir, and it goes farther. This organization fixes standards. The members must not write anything deleterious to the Reich. Newspapermen have the status of quasi government officers."

Over defense objections, the jurors were shown a sheet of letters in which Zapp addressed Dr. Friedhelm Draeger, German vice consul in New York, as district leader of the Foreign Organization of the Nazi Party. Draeger began his replies with "Dear Party Member Dr. Zapp."

Morosini Protests

Morosini protested that "we are not concerned with the activities of the Nazi Party."

Sell disclosed that it was Dr. Hans Luther, once German Ambassador in Washington, who conceived the idea of getting the Transocean dispatches in the American German language press. Sell said that when Luther brought up the subject he suggested that the service be given away for $1 a month. "Something like $1-a-year-men here," he explained.

Judge Davidson took cognizance yesterday of disclosure, by The Post, of the murder of one of the Government's key witnesses against Transocean.

Arturo Regueros Peralta, Columbian congressman and former president of the House, was shot down in Bucaramanga, Colombia, on July 3, the night before he planned to fly to Washington to take the witness stand.

Warned of Nazi Peril

He was to have exposed Transocean propaganda activities, and probably other Nazi infiltration, in South America. Regueros Peralta was fiercely anti-Nazi, proclaiming in his newspaper, El Comunero, the danger to his country from the German influence.

Defense counsel entered court with a bundle of newspapers containing the article. Before proceedings started, Morosini and McNulty, with their associates, Daniel F. Cohalan, Jr., New York, and Albert E. Arent, followed Judge Davidson into chambers. The disclosures there were confidential.

However, at the noon recess, Judge Davidson spoke earnestly to the jurors for several minutes.

Judge Davidson said the jurors' minds must reject all information about the case and all information about any matter bearing on the case that came from any source besides the witness stand.

Latin Ramifications

The disclosures of newspapers and the contents of the radio, the judge said, were not for members of the jury. Otherwise the trial would become "a void proceeding."

Although Regueros Peralta is dead and several of his South American colleagues will not appear, the prosecution still expects to present the evidence of a number of Latin editors who dealt with Transocean or watched its operations.

Scheduled to appear today is Hugo Fernandez Arturo, Chilean anti-Nazi leader. Author of a book condemning the Nazi influence, Fernandez Arturo was jailed for criminal libel. When his demand for a trial was granted, he won his freedom and obtained the arrest of several of his opponents.

White House Photographers Honor Army's Picture Man

"FAREWELL AND GOOD LUCK, COLONEL"—Hugo Johnson, president of the White House News Photographers Association, says farewell to Lieut. Col. Frank A. Allen, Jr. (left), director of pictorial publicity for the Army. Col. Allen, who is leaving Washington this week for Fort Knox to serve with the mechanized forces, was given a testimonial luncheon by the photographers' association yesterday at the Carlton Hotel.

For the first time since the White House News Photographers Association was formed 20 years ago, the lensmen met yesterday to honor a press agent.

Their honored guest at a luncheon held at the Carlton Hotel was Lieut. Col. Frank A. Allen, Jr., director of pictorial publicity for the United States Army since the present emergency. Col. Allen leaves his present post for more active duty in the field, reporting this week for service with the mechanized forces at Fort Knox.

The Army picture man was well known in this city many years ago when, as a cavalry officer in command of Troop F at Fort Myer, Va., he enlisted the aid of the news photographers here after developing a group of acrobatic riders at his former post. National attention was focused on the soldier acrobatic riders and they were invited to perform at State fairs throughout the country, thereby stimulating enlistments in the United States Cavalry.

Cooke Papers Are Donated to U. S. Library

Archibald MacLeish, librarian of Congress, announced yesterday that Nathan N. Wallack, Washington businessman and collector, had donated to the Library a collection of manuscripts, scrapbooks, diaries and inscribed copies of works of John Estlin Cooke.

Cooke, Virginia novelist, historian, and aide-de-camp and biographer of Stonewall Jackson, died in 1896 at the age of 56. His best known works are "The Virginia Comedies" and "Surrey of Eagle's Nest," the manuscripts of which are the property of Duke University.

The Wallack collection, described by the Library as "one of the most significant donations of Southern memorabilia received by the Library in recent years," contained manuscript letters to Cooke from such notables as Mark Twain, Washington Irving and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

Of Cooke's own works, the collection included "Virginia: A History of the People," a presentation copy to his son Edmund and Robert; "The Wearing of the Gray," a presentation copy to his wife; "Stonewall Jackson, a Military Biography," also a presentation copy to his wife, and "A Life of Gen. Robert E. Lee," a presentation copy to his son Edmund on the latter's first birthday.

Another item was a copy of William Swinton's "Campaign of the Armies of the Potomac," with critical and historical comments written in the margins by Cooke.

'Speedy' Doesn't Bat an Eye, The Sloth, on Getting a Family

Speedy came into a family yesterday, which takes him out of 1-A, but it did not faze him at all.

A widower and sole inhabitant of the sloth cage in the zoo's lion house, Speedy had a mate and a stepson dropped on him. He scarcely opened his eyes.

Speedy—they call him that because he is anything but—just scratched his right flank as the sloth department became a threesome. For that matter, the new misus paid him nothing but a lazy glance and her little one kept its head buried in mama's shaggy bosom.

All three are of the two-toed species. There is also a three-toed variety, which prompted Zoo Director William M. Mann to stick his tongue in cheek and announce gradually.

"We now have 50 per cent of all species of sloth—except for subspecies."
